Carillion bells to chime at St. Stephen's June 29

Timothy Hurd, national carillonist of New Zealand, will perform on the Olsen Nauen Transportable Carillon of 52 bells and the Jessie M. Barron Memorial Carillon of 51 bells at St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, 16 Highland Avenue, Sunday, June 29, at 6 p.m.

This is the first recital of the 1986 series, which is the 62nd season of carillon music at the church. The series includes different musical programs for every Sunday evening of the summer through Aug. 31. Timothy Hurd, who designed he Norweigian transportable carillon, will offer a program which features the music of Handel and Mozart, as well as popular music such as "Over the Rainbow" from the Wizard of Oz and variations on "America."

The public is invited free of charge to attend the concert on the Cohasset Common. Bring lawn chairs, blankets and picnic suppers. Programs will be available on the Common. Recitals will take place rain or shine. In case of rain, you may listen from you parked car.

Unlike the tower carillon of St. Stephen's Church, the transportable carillon consists of cast bronze bells clearly visible set atop a flatbed truck. The largest bell of the transportable carillon weighs 2,310 pounds, while that of the St. Stephen's tower carillon weighs 11,760 pounds. In both carillons, however, the bells themselves do not move. The player has direct control of the bells, making the sound loud or soft at will by activating the clappers which strike the lower curve of each bell.

Other performances throughout the summer will be recitalists Daniel K. Kehoe from Trinity College in Hartford, CT; Rene Vanstreels from Hasselt, Belgium; Richard N. Watson from I.T. Verdin Co. in Cincinnati; Carlo van Ulft from Venlo, the Netherlands; Michel Goddefroy from Tourcoing, France; Linda Walker Pointer from Clearwater, FL; Edward M. Nassor from Arlington, VA; and George Matthew Jr. from Stamford, CT. The final recital by Sally Slade Warner of St. Stephen's Church on Aug. 31 will include request numbers suggested by listeners during the previous weeks.

For further information about the recitals or the request program, you may call St. Stephen's Church at 383-1083.

Gilbert Tower Memorial Award winner - James Walsh

James Patrick Walsh

(This essay by James Patrick Walsh won the first annual Gilbert Tower Memorial Award at Cohasset High School. Walsh will be a senior at the school next year. Ed.)

The athletic areas found near Cohasset High School are in dire need of repair. It is no secret that the facilities are probably among the worst in the state of Massachusetts. In 1972, the New England Association of Schools and Colleges, Inc. (the firm that accredits all of the schools in the state) published a report titled "Evaluation of Cohasset High School, Cohasset, Massachusetts, Report of Visiting Committee." It contained a list of suggested changes to be made. Among those changes cited were "14. The present physical education field be expanded and maintained properly with particular attention being given to the drainage problem." and "15. The football field be reconditioned to eliminate the present hazardous condition." That report was written 14 years ago, and very little has changed since then.

A plan to improve Miliken field and the field behind Cohasset High School will be presented for the public's approval at a Special Town Meeting, to be scheduled some time in June. The plan will be the result of the efforts of a group of concerned citizens led by Kenneth Ekburg, who felt that they must act to alleviate the extremely poor condition of the recreational fields. Already, they have managed to get money allocated to hire Spinx Associates, of Cambridge, to start drawing up plans for the project. However, according to Mr. Ekburg, Article 9, a request for an additional twenty five thousand dollars, will be withdrawn from consideration at the Special Town Meeting, included with the Annual Town Meeting to be held on April 5, 1986.

The request for additional funding is to be withdrawn, because the group of citizens sponsoring the plan do not wish to waste taxpayer's money. The designs for the first phase of the plan are very near completion, if not already complete, and it is believed that the voters can decide on the basis of the diagrams for the first phase, and thereby save the public much greater should the plan not be approved. The plan itself, not to be accomplished at one time, but in different stages, will involve two different land areas. On the field in back of the High School, a track will be constructed, and it will become the Varsity field, for Boys' and Girls' Varsity sports and Track and Field. Up at Miliken Field, three separate playing fields will be constructed, to be used for practice, baseball, softball and Junior Varsity sports. This may or may not involve the broadening of the field into the woods, but such work has already been going on for the past few years. There were ideas for building lavatories and storage buildings by Miliken Field, but Mr. Ekburg says the public may use the restrooms by the C.H.S. cafeteria in the rear of the building, and there is adequate storage in the High School. There could also be concessions sold, to benefit the athletic clubs such as the Grid-iron club, by opening a sales window in the cafeteria, which is conveniently located at the base of the proposed Varsity field.

Many people may think that Miliken Field is property of the Cohasset Public Schools, due to its proximity to the High School and the fact that the school is its primary user. In fact, it was deeded to the town with the restriction that the area was to be used for recreational use only, thereby including not only the school, but the summer recreation program, private groups and individuals as well. Although Mr. Ekburg is the Principal of Cohasset Deer Hill School, the plan was not sponsored by the school system, nor would it be involved in financing the project. A few suggestions were made by the school, but as an entity, it is legally outside school department jurisdiction. Cohasset High School therefor has everything to gain, and nothing to lose in the decision, whether or not this plan is put into effect. As Mr. Eugene Crowell, Superintendent of Schools said in an interview with me, "we would like to see this happen."

Mr. Crowell and the rest of the school certainly have good reason to wish to see the Miliken problem rectified. Both Mr. Crowell and Mr. Ekburg mentioned in their respective interviews the problem of Track and Field being scheduled at the same time as other sports, due to the havoc a javelin match might create. Even then, sometimes it is impossible to schedule two events at the same time, due to a lack of space. This can cause problems in scheduling activities. The public, in part, has also realized the state of the fields, which is shown by the attempts to alleviate the problem. Take, for example, the previously mentioned broadening of Miliken Field, and the re-seeding of said area. Evidently, they have not been enough. Mr. Ekburg described these attempts as "piece meal, nickel-and-dime stuff." According to Mr. Crowell, the enactment of this plan would make Miliken field (and the back field) into "a much more useable place". The Evaluation Report mentioned at the start of this article illustrates the state's view of the matter, as well as showing the problem's old and chronic nature. If the three most interested parties in this matter, school, public and state, agree that there is a problem, then why is this plan, or a similar one, not already in effect?

To sum it up in one word, "money." Obviously, there appears to be a problem, with the town having gone so far already, as to allocate funds for repair, and hire an architect to draw up plans to eliminate the problem. But all sides are painfully aware of the large sums of money to be spent. To avoid the loss of as much money as possible, the advocates of this plan have decided to suffice with the diagrams for the first phase, and have the rest finished if and when the plan is approved. The engineer's survey already has cost the taxpayers approximately twenty thousand dollars, voted for in June, 1985. The real question is whether or not the people of Cohasset are willing to devote a large sum of money to this project. According to Mr. Ekburg, no official sum has been reached, but an article in the Patriot Ledger, dated March 12, 1986, cites a figure of $775,000. The article itself dealt with the Capital Budget Committee's recommendations to the advisory committee, giving a list of priorities for town meeting. This article indirectly revealed the crux of the matter. Cohasset is a small town with limited funds, especially as it contends with Proposition 2½. There are many problems such as a need for new buses, road repaving, capping a land fill, emergency generators, and money is needed for the fire department, police department, water department and sewer commission. A tie-in of the town's sewer system to the Hull waste-treatment plant will cost $800,000, and renovations to the town hall, police and fire stations may cost $500,000. On the Capital Budget Committee's list of suggestions, the Miliken Renovation Project received lowest priority. It is doubtful that the state would donate an appreciable grant to this public works project, if any at all. To quote Mr. Crowell, "the only problem Cohasset faces is the lack of finances, and the public must choose priorities."

Student volunteers given thanks

Thanks are in order for a wonderful group of students. Kerri Anglin, Karen Atkinson, Liz Buckley, Robin Haynes, Kay Long, Maureen Long, Shawn McCarthy, Jim Reidy, Mike Figueiredo, Liz Hurley, Jennifer Martin, and Eileen O'Connor, all from Cohasset High School, just completed an eight-week commitment helping children with special needs in an afterschool recreation program at Osgood School.

They assisted Mrs. Helen Pratt, former physical education teacher at the elementary school and program director of this program, helping the children learn independent skills and develop a better concept of group play. In addition, the children continued to learn good sportsmanship, develop and foster friendships, and grow in self-esteem.

This new program called "Super Kids in Movement" is sponsored by South Shore Association of Retarded Citizens under the direction of Norene Carter, C.S.D., and Drew Bililies of Alternative Leisure Co. The students did a great job and hopefully, they benefited from this experience also. Without their time and effort, "Super Kids in Movement" would not have been possible. A sincere thank you to some very special young friends!

FROM THE KITCHEN

by JOAN PINKHAM

It takes a lot of decisions to shop today

Decisions! Decisions! There are so many choices, so many products, so many options that just a trip to the supermarket is a challenge these days.

A decade ago the average supermarket carried 9,000 items and today it carries 22,000. There are aisles of shampoo, shelves of granola bars and a study by a Manhattan advertising agency found that there are even 23 varieties of just one brand of cat food, while over in the beauty section there are 157 shades of lipstick from which to choose.

To wander the aisles of beverages you have to decide if you want Fudge Soda or Spaceman Fruit Drinks and in the candy section among the stacks of sweets are Gummy Bears, Squirms(worm-shaped candies), Pop n' Nutty to name but a few.

Well, I've been trying to decide just who sent me this elegant recipe—if I read her writing correctly, it's Judy Pietras of Marshfield we have to thank for this.

MOCHA MOUSSE CHEESECAKE

1 c. graham cracker crumbs
1/4 c. butter
2T sugar
1/2 tsp. cinnamon
3 8-oz. pkg. cream cheese
3/4 c. sugar
3 large eggs
1 8-oz. pkg. semi-sweet chocolate squares
2T whipping cream
1 c. sour cream
1 tsp. instant espresso dissolved in 1/4 c. hot water, cooled
1/4 c. coffee liqueur
2 tsp. vanilla

Butter 8" springform pan. Combine first four ingredients. Press onto bottom of pan. Beat cream cheese 'til smooth. Add sugar, mixing until well blended. Add eggs one at a time and beat at low speed. Melt chocolate with whipping cream over boiling water, stir often 'till smooth. Add to cheese mixture. Mix in sour cream, then cooled coffee and liqueur. Add vanilla. Beat until well blended. Turn into springform pan. Bake 45 min. in 350 oven, or until sides are slightly puffed. Center will still be a bit soft, but will firm up when chilled. Cool on rack. Refrigerate for at least 12 hours before serving. Garnish with shaved chocolate. 12-15 servings.

Frank Svelnis writes that General Mills is giving an award as part of the Marshfield Fair Country Arts Exhibit, Aug. 13-Aug. 24. Call Fran at 826-3234 if you have questions about the "Softasilk Cake Flour Award" of $15 in the cake categories. Fran and her committee are full of exciting plans for their displays in the Exhibition Hall.

A trip to a department store can reduce one to a frazzle. Just a seemingly simple errand for a white shirt for Dad and there are a zillion different departments that might carry them and a multitude of styles from which to select. It used to be fun to shop for a pretty new dress, but because there are so many shades of just one color, it seems impossible to match shoes with blouse with skirt, ect. Here is a simple little recipe which requires little effort:

30-MINUTE SUPPER BAKE

1 pd. small sausage links
1T water
2T ea. chopped onion and celery
1 c. ea. cooked rice, shredded carrots
1/2 c. grated American cheese
2 beaten eggs

Place sausages in cold skillet Add water, cover and cook until water evaporates. Uncover, brown and drain. Remove and arrange in greased 1-qt. casserole. Cook onion and celery in skillet until golden. Combine ingredients and pour into casserole. Bake in 350 oven for 30 min. Serves four.

Reanne Rosenhahan has taken precious time from her work week to send me a batch of recipes from her former neighbor, Connie Griffin, now of New Mexico. Once again, for lack of space, I'm faced with decisions as to which recipes to print for now, so I'll tuck them away, but in the meantime, if you need a recipe for Barbequed Raccoon, Venison Swiss Steak, we've got it straight from New Mexico. Perhaps more to our Yankee taste, we might prefer this recipe from Reanne and Connie:

SQUASH CASSEROLE

4 c. cooked squash, drained
1 can mushroom soup
1 onion, chopped
1 c. grated sharp cheese
2 eggs, beaten
1 c. ritz cracker crumbs

Mix and pour into casserole. Top with more cheese and crackers. Dot with butter. Bake 350 degrees for 35 min. approx.

THE DRAGON'S DUNGEON — By CLAIRE McDONOUGH

'TV wrestling or yardsaling is where it's at'

I glared at the Dragon. "That," I told him, "is the last time I take you yardsaling."

He looked hurt. "I don't see why. You're always saying we don't spend enough time together and that we should share each other's interests. The way I see it, the alternative to my going to yard sales is for you to start watching TV wrestling. Or girls."

"Well, you can forget that," I snapped. "I refuse to share a wrestling experience with someone who kept me from buying a beautiful color TV for only $6. And anyway, you know I hate wrestling matches. They're all fixed; the announcers' I.Q.'s are roughly the same as their age, and the wrestlers all have weird names. Stop trying to change the subject. You just ruined a perfectly good yard sale for me."

He sighed. "The TV had a note on it that said 'Needs Picture Tube.' Have you any idea how much that $6 TV would have cost?"

"We could have used the cabinet for a book case," I retorted. If the TV worked, you would only have used it to watch more moronic wrestling matches. With people who have names like Junkyard Dog, Jake the Snake, the Missing Link, the Magnificant One and Jumpin' Lennie."

"Hey, wait a minute," he interjected. "Don't go bad mouthing Jumpin' Lennie. Have you ever seen him defend our nation's honor against that slimy communist, Ivan Kolkov? The commie always says he's going to bury us, and trail our flag in the dirt, and Lennie goes right in and mops the ring up with him."

I sniffed. "How much do you want to bet that Ivan Kolkov was born in Hoboken? That fake Russian accent wouldn't fool anybody but someone who's never met a real Russian."

"That's all you know," he replied. "There are lots of different dialects. Ivan could be a Georgian Russian."

"Right. Atlanta, Georgia. I will have to admit, though, that some of those guys are really skilled actors. Those Federation belts they all wear must be the equivalent to Oscars or Emmies. And by the way, how come they're all champions? How can you have champions without any losers?"

"You just don't understand," he retorted. "They keep winning the belts from each other. That's why there's so much suspense. What if some day the Russian should take the belt away from an American? And TV wrestling is filled with adventure and romance.

"That Baby Doll is a heartless female. She changes wrestlers more often than the belts do. But Lovely Elizabeth is true blue. Come what may, you know she'll be right there beside Randy Savage, even though he doesn't deserve her."

"When you watch TV wrestling, you also have the opportunity to see courage in the face of adversity, grace under pressure, violence, jealousy, raw hatred. You have the unparalleled and rare occasion to observe primitive emotions. You don't need a TV that you can turn into a bookcase. You can get rid of all your books. You need a TV that gets the wrestling channel. You can watch Federation wrestling and, from the safety of your chair, view the depths to which human nature can sink as well as the indomitability of the human spirit as it rises to new heights in response to depravity.

TV wrestling is where it's at. Yardsaling is for wimps."

"You think so?" I chortled. "Today's sale may have seemed just a tad wimpy, but that's because you didn't let me stay long enough for any real drama to develop.

"You want raw emotion? I give you two customers going after the same Corning ware dish.

"You want courage? I give you the husband who forces his way into a yard sale and retrieves his favorite jacket that his wife has donated to the sale. And let me tell you, he has to fight for it.

"You want violence? I give you the 'professionals' who get to a yard sale an hour before its advertised opening and use brute strength to try to get at the sale items before anyone else.

"You want heroism? I give you the homeowner who fights off the attackers so that everyone will have an equal chance. Because she believes in truth, justice, and the American way of life.

"You go to enough yard sales, Bucko, and you'll see more depravity and indomitability than you bargain for. A good yard sale makes TV wrestling look like Tiny Tim tiptoing through the tulips." Wrestling is a spectator sport. With yardsaling you're part of the action."

The Dragon looked startled. Maybe we have more in common than I thought. Is there a yard sale channel on cable TV?"

Hunter farewell reception

Richard Hunter, organist and choir director at St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, 16 Highland Ave., will be honored at a farewell reception to be held at the church Sunday, June 29 after the 10 a.m. service of Holy Communion.

Hunter is leaving his position at St. Stephen's Church in order to attend Suffolk Law School in the fall.

This marks a new direction from a distinguished career in music. Hunter, who came to St. Stephen's in 1977, had received the bachelor of music degree, magna cum laude, from the University of Florida in 1976. While at the university he received the Francis Millikan Reitz Award, which is the highest honor that institution can confer upon a student musician. At. St. Stephen's, Hunter went on to receive the master of music degree from Boston University. He served on the faculty of the South Shore Conservatory of Music as an instructor in organ.

In addition to an acclaimed organist, Hunter is also a distinguished harpist.

Citizens transit committee to issue public information

By Don Merrill
Mariner Staff

The Citizens' Advisory Committee on restoration of the Old Colony Railroad, in an effort to get information to the public, has agreed to abide by the state Open Meeting Law in its monthly meetings.

The committee has also asked MBTA consultants in the project to keep it informed of concerns residents cite in meetings with area officials.

The consultants are making the rounds of towns that would be served by restored commuter rail for initial meetings with local selectmen, planners and other officials concerned with the project.

The new effort is in response to concerns voiced at the monthly meetings. About 20 residents of the area, especially Braintree and Hingham, packed a small hearing room in Braintree Town Hall where the citizens' panel met Thursday.

"If people knew about the local meetings, we wouldn't have as many residents coming to these meetings," said committee Chairman Terry N. Fancher.

Committee member Richard Bowen, a Scituate selectman, suggested other members should also meet with officials from their towns as part of the information effort.

"Ask for an agenda item to talk about the function of the Citizens' Advisory Committee," Bowen said. "Most of our towns have cable TV that covers selectmens' meetings, so that's a good way for people to learn about what's happening."

Consultant Stephen Polechronis said some meetings with local officials have been well attended by residents, especially in Hingham, Braintree and Scituate.

Consultants will meet with officials in Randolph at 9 p.m. Monday. The next area meeting will be held July 15 in Plymouth.

At the Braintree meeting June 16, Polechronis said many residents expressed concerns about parking and historical homes near the railbed.

"One of the things they brought up was the fact that Braintree already serves as host to several transportation venues," he said.

Polechronis said a meeting with Hingham officials showed residents have many "serious concerns," but none were expressed that consultants had not heard.

While public input is desirable now, he said, it will become even more important as study "scoping" ends around September and the citizens' committee begins to look at the impact restored commuter rail and stations will have on sensitive areas.

The committee is now scoping the study, eliminating the areas which it decides won't need further scrutiny. On Thursday, however, Polechronis said committee members added several sites to the list of areas on the study.

In effect, the committee is studying restoration in general. When it begins to review specific sites after September, it will evaluate impacts such as land acquisition, air quality, noise and vibration, water and wetlands, parking and traffic, community disruption and safety.

Citizens at Thursday's meeting asked about impacts in their towns. Diane Morash of West Hingham cited possible problems in the town, notably at Forth Hill Street and Station Street, where rail stations may be located.

Morash said Fort Hill is densely populated, while many businesses are concentrated on Station Street.

"The Hingham segment of the railroad was not included" in the initial walkthrough by committee members in the spring, she said. "We've only had one open meeting. It seems to me there's no link between possible input and the citizens' committee."

Polecronis said full public hearings will be held in affected communities as the study progresses. The hearings will probably begin in the fall, he added.

"What are the people of Braintree going to get out of this?" asked Eugene Maloney of Bayberry Lane.

"The whole South Shore has a traffic problem," said Fancher, a former Braintree news correspondent, "and that's really the point of the study. I would think commuter rail might help relieve congestion in Braintree streets to some degree."

It would relieve local rush-hour backups because some Randolph and Holbrook commuters could be expected to use trains instead, he explained.

"We're looking at both positive and negative impacts in all areas, and that includes traffic studies," Polechronis said.

The committee's next meeting is scheduled for 7:30 p.m. Thursday, June 17 in the lower level of Braintree Town Hall.

Coop-6 brunch

Democratic Attorney General candidates James Shannon and Joanne Shotwell are scheduled to speak at a Coop-6 brunch at the Escapade in Weymouth at 11 a.m. Sunday, June 29.

The Weymouth Democratic Town Committee will host the fundraising event. Coop-6 is a group of Democratic town committees from Weymouth, Hull, Hingham, Cohasset, Scituate and Marshfield.

Tickets are $11 each and may be obtained by calling Selectman Jack Carey, brunch chairman, at 331-7719.

Voters defeat citizens plan to review all sewer options

Town meeting was completed in rapid order Tuesday night. Unlike the previous night, more than 20 articles were finalized without incident.

Perhaps the biggest controversy of the night occurred at the start of the second session of the June special town meeting. Water commissioner William Mountouri requested reconsideration of Monday night's vote not to appropriate $20,000 to fund an evaluation of a sewer plan for the town.

Monday night, voters narrowly defeated a citizen's proposal to review all options available for the town's sewer plan.

"All article 15 would do," Montouri explained Tuesday night, "is fund an independent evaluation of those various options. It would be completed by October so the requirement for the plan would be passed in time to meet the DEQE (Department of Environmental Quality Engineering) regulations and litigation."

Selectman Cliff Mitman placed a damper on the motion to reconsider by stating that unless new information is presented on an article, reconsidering a previous vote is a "waste of time."

Sewer commissioner Charles DeSantis originally intended to appeal the moderator's approval of a reconsideration request. But after conferring with town counsel and moderator William Weeks, the commissioner withdrew his appeal.

DeSantis explained the town has had a total of ten sewer analyses completed by Metcalf and Eddy and Ward Engineering. Ward was selected, he said, because they offered the proper type of services for a small community. "Any other plan is repetitious, costly, and totally unnecessary," he told the town meeting voters.

The motion to reconsider was soundly defeated.

Another article rousing a bit of interest in the Tuesday night crowd was a motion to amend the zoning bylaw to include a definition of a commercial kennel. The article was defeated, which means that all existing kennels are grandfathered into the zoning bylaw, but any new kennels will need a variance or special permit from the town.

The article defeated Tuesday night by town meeting would only apply to commercial breeders, thus allowing private residences to have as many dogs as they want, as long as the dogs are not specifically bred for profit. Only commercial kennels would require variances, residents would be free of that requirement, according to the town counsel.

By defeating the article, the current kennel license procedure remains. If the article had been approved, "it would make it a right for someone to have as many dogs as they want," Selectman Diane Sullivan stated, arguing against adoption of the bylaw amendment.

The sewer commissioners were successful in their town meeting endeavors Tuesday night as voters approved all the financial requests.

Engineering fees totaling $3,800 were appropriated for bills incurred during the past year by the town in an effort to gain state approval of a sewer plan. Additional engineering information has been required by the state, commissioner Ted Guild explained.

Article 17 was approved, which included $6,500 for legal fees expected to be incurred during the next fiscal year. Although originally estimated at $20,000, Guild said the town is making much progress with the state. A major portion of the money will be expended in negotiations with Hull and engineering work necessary for that plan.

Selectmen, as in the previous article, were split in their decision whether to recommend the appropriation. No recommendation was forthcoming from the board of selectman Sullivan said, because two selectmen favored the funding, and two opposed it.

An article requesting the transfer of 24 acres of school-owned land to the housing authority was postponed. Housing chairman John Muncey moved for the postponment.

The school committee, based on a recommendation of its school facilities committee, had voted to approve the transfer of two acres of land to the housing authority.

The housing authority intended to develop two intermediate care facilities for six mentally retarded adults.

Voters decided to appropriate $6,000 for an appraisal of land off King Street known as the Lily Pond Estates. Selectman Rocco Laugelle said the appraisal was necessary before the town can determine whether to attempt taking the acreage by eminent domain. The property abuts the town's primary water supply source at Lily Pond. It is currently intended to be subdivided into several lots for development. Although the planning board rejected the proposal, the developers are appealing the decision in court.

Voters also approved funding for a permanent handicapped access ramp at the town hall. Chastising any resident who would not support the worthwhile project, selectman Laugelle called the "dilly-dallying" the past five years on this issue has been "shameful."

Several residents, including Benjamin Blake who served on the town hall study committee, suggested leaving the temporary ramp in place. Then if voters decide to one day build an addition to the town hall, it will include a permanent ramp and elevator access.

Voters approved the original motion to construct a permanent ramp onto the existing building.

At the conclusion of the meeting, Wayne Sawchuk of Beechwood Street suggested the town appropriate an additional $3,000 to prepare specifications and perform engineering tests to upgrade the town hall bathrooms, the sewerage system and to install an elevator at the building.

Noting the conditions at the two lower bathrooms are disgusting, Sawchuk said a fully automated elevator, similar to the one installed in the Congregational church, should be included in the plans.

After a quick conference, the advisory committee backed his suggestion. Although they agreed the sewer system needs to be reviewed, selectmen decided not to vote whether to recommend the article.

An article proposed by the planning board was defeated. The proposal would ban all free standing buildings less than 500 square feet in the light industry or highway district of town.

Saying the proposal would prohibit the construction of a company security house, a photo drive-up window, or a home's shed, Sawchuk urged voters to defeat the article.

Board member Robert Sturdy explained the bylaw amendment would tie up a loophole in the zoning bylaw and prevent kiosks or shacks in the two districts. The minimal size for a free-standing building in those districts would be approximately the size of a two-car garage.

Voters defeated the article.

A professional review of 'The Witches of Eastwick'

By Richard Hayes
Director
Paul Pratt Memorial Library
Special to the Mariner

The news being confirmed, that our selectmen have granted permission, and that our village will soon be visited by a company engaged in the filming of a tale of modern witchcraft, the Mariner has asked your humble servant to write about the purported source document of this tale, a recent fiction by John Updike of Ipswich.

How well we remember that 294 years ago nearby Salem was caught up in a fever of excitement concerning witches, a turmoil arising which resulted in the unfortunate hanging and crushing of nineteen citizens by the authorities.

Toward the aim, therefore, that our citizens and town fathers may more clearly distinguish one illusion from another, if not from reality, should quarrels arise from the events about to unfold, this modest review of Mr. Updike's novel, "The Witches of Eastwick," is offered.

Among the events which we may witness, and which may have little to do with the book, are: the company of foreigners who intend to make a film with the same title; a large crowd of folks, native and foreign, who hope fervently to become associated with the excitement; persons who may protest, for a variety of reasons, the making of the film, the writing of the book, the presence of the filmmakers or the book in our community, the decisions of the Church and of the Town to permit such goings-on. It has been reported that some, claiming to be witches, are opposed because the book (which they may not have read) and the film (which does not yet exist) do not portray witches as these spokespersons for the craft would have it done. Perhaps there is another book to be had out of the matter.

This book is Updike's eleventh novel. His other novels, and 17 other books of stories, poems, plays and essays, have not usually dealt with witches, although some of his characters have been possessed by impulses which some might regard devilish, if one may use such an expression to denote the discontents of contemporary suburban life.

The main characters of Mr. Updike's invention are three women, Alexandra, Jane, and Sukie, divorced, with children and lovers, who, except for their extraordinary powers over nature, are not unlike women one found in such towns along the New England coast from Boston to New York, during that recent time noted for the Vietnam War and its domestic anguishes. Their lives are changed, over the course of the year described in this story, by a newly arrived unmarried man in town, Darryl Van Horne, who impresses everyone with the hairy backs to his hands, who needs all the room in the old Lenox mansion because he is an inventor with a lab and he owns a number of pianos, which he plays expertly.

Something in the air of Eastwick, Rhode Island, has brought the three women, since they each arrived from elsewhere, into their powers of witchery sufficiently that among other odd acts they have reduced their ex-husbands to dust capped tightly in a jar on the kitchen shelf, to a dried-out thing hung with the herbs in the cellar, and to a plastic place mat.

Jane plays the cello in chamber music concert at the Unitarian Church. The women and Van Horne first meet at the reception in the church parlor following the concert. He is rich, apparently, but vulgar. He is pushy and insulting, yet fascinating. Within days, each of the women visits his home. "That's where the action was, not here in town where oil-streaked harbor water lapped the pilings and placed a shudder of reflected light upon the haggard faces of the citizens of Eastwick as they plodded through their civic and Christian duties." This is about the collapse of faith, and hope, and love, and the frantic search for something new and exciting to fill the emptiness.

Van Horne shows off his house to the women. He brags lavishly of rare books and fine art still packed in crates, but the house is shabby and badly underfurnished. "Van Horne had the robust instincts of a creator but with only, it seemed, half the needed raw materials." His art collection is expensive but disconcerting: "a giant hamburger of violently colored, semi-inflated vinyl," "a white plaster woman at a real ironing board, with an actual dead cat from a taxidermist's rubbing at her ankles," "giant pay telephones in limp canvas, American flags duplicated in impasto, oversize dollar bills rendered with deadpan fidelity, relentless enlargements of our comic strips and advertising insignia, our movies stars and bottle caps, our candies and newspapers and traffic signs" - "All that we wish to use and discard with scarcely a glance was here held up bloated and bright: permanized garbage."

"Alexandra, hoping that art, any art, might staunch the internal bleeding of her melancholy, moved among the giant hamburgers and ceramic dartboards as if she had never seen them before." This book is not about adultery, though there is much of that, but about boredom, contempt of people for their lifework, contempt between spouses, about the desperate longing of lost souls to make some connection with real life.

The self-proclaimed witches find in Van Horne "our redeemer from Eastwick ennui." They may move objects about and cause dogs to die mysteriously, but their newfound powers and joys are not nearly as evil as the bitterness and deadness of the ordinary people of the town, committing all their little murders of one another's spirits day in and day out, not as evil as the pervasive abuse of alcohol by everyone, witch or Christian, as if life were otherwise intolerable, not as evil as the real murder and suicide committed by one of the town's leading citizens, for which his wife, the murder victim, is as responsible as anyone, despite her do-gooder pretensions throughout the community.

In this world of Updike's characters God has retired, if not disappeared, no authentic humanism sustains the folk, and the Devil isn't very interested in his job either. People seem to have gotten the knack of being nasty without needing any more serious enticements. The wickedness Updike's characters are up to is not dramatic, not even funny, mostly banal, more likely to make the reader tired than excited. Van Horne is not to be taken seriously as "the dark one." He is less interested in seducing the innocent than in pursuing his knowledge. Like Adam in Eden, like the nuclear scientists of our day, if he succeeds in plucking the fruit, one fears he will find a worm or a scorpion in it. He pumps his women friends for their secrets. He raves on and on about new sources of energy he will invent, or building materials to replace steel and plastic. His obsessions sound like crackpot business, like alchemy of old. His fabulous teak hot tub quickly ruins the elaborate sound system he installed around it. The moveable ceiling blows a fuse and doesn't work anymore. The hot air canopy over his tennis courts collapses, so he and his friends can't play tennis all winter after all. He is a sorry specimen of a 1968 model playboy. Despite all the hints, one is hard put to believe this is the devil. Is that the ironic point? We don't have God or the devil to fear, to obey, to blame anymore. At any rate, the community outside this devil's playhouse is whimpering to it endings without serious participation of devils or witches. A shifty-eyed president is making a serious announcement on TV but no one is really paying attention.

These witches are not what Cotton Mather worried about. Their greatest malevolence, inspired by jealousy toward another woman over a man, seems rather ordinary and turns out ambiguously. The nature of their witchness, in fact, is ambiguous. Other persons in the Town may be witches. It is easy to create and spread the belief. We must beware of pointing too quickly.

The Unitarian Church and its ministers, husband and (subsequently) wife, figure prominently in the story. A climatic scene has Van Horne, having achieved some respectability, guest preaching a "secular sermon" one August Sunday to a hardy dozen listeners. It's a great speech, though definitely not uplifting, and we can eagerly look forward to seeing Jack Nicholson give it.

Yes, the part is made for Nicholson, the dialogue sounding like characters he has played before. (Those who read the book before he was cast: did you think so?)

The popular desire to be in a movie notwithstanding, there are no parts in the book that any good citizen of Cohasset I know would want to play; perhaps the filmscript will be different. This is a serious piece of literature. With luck, the film may be more amusing and more entertaining.

Politicus — by David A. Mittell, Jr.

The decline of the Republican Party, Part III:

What needs to be done

In the first two parts of this series I tried to enumerate the causes of the Republican decline in Massachusetts. But both the Repubican faithful and the merely curious may now wonder: What is to be done? Is there any hope?

Surely there is hope, and not just on account of the man in the White House. Here is one indication that there is much hope: A few months ago I was honored to be a guest in the home of Judge Gordon Martin of the Roxbury District Court. Judge Martin is a former head of the Massachusetts Chapter of the Americans for Democratic Action, a life-long liberal, and a man whom I consider one of Gov. Dukakis' two or three finest appointments in his second term.

Judge Martin and I inevitably got into a discussion, he staking out a liberal position, me being disagreeable as per usual. By and by the good judge had to tend to his 99-odd other guests, at which point his brilliant son Peter came over, tugged at my elbow, and said in a low, clandestine, and conspiratorial tone: "You know, Mr. Mittell, I'm not liberal like my father; on some issues I'm conservative!"

I have, moreoever, other, crasser liberal friends than the Martins, friends who used to regale themselves calling their own parents "fascist pigs," whose own children now call them "liberal hippie communists." I think you get the drift: The coming generation is going to be far more conservative and therefore more naturally Republican than the committed but often frivolous and ultimately negative generation that came of age between the death of Kennedy and the resignation of Nixon.

Therein lies opportunaity for this two-flowered rush of a political party we call the Massachusetts Republicans. Whether the Party will be able to take advantage of its historic opportunity is problematic, for it is 20 years behind the National Republican Party, which despite Watergate has been in ascent since the mid-term elections of 1966. To rise from their present ignominy, the Massachusetts Republicans will have to do a few things—not that many really—correctly.

The first is to stop fighting among themselves. Ethnic conservatives like Ray Shamie and Andrew Natsios must stop fighting each other, then together they must stop fighting the liberal Yankees. All parties to this Party need to heed Ronald Reagan's famous "eleventh commandment" . . . "Never speak ill of a fellow Republican."

Secondly, the Republicans need to go after legislative seats. Another story from my anecdotal repertory (if you will tolerate it) will illustrate the behavior Republicans need to alter if they are to turn things around. . . .

For years the Democratic legislator representing the home of the first Mariner newspaper, the Marshfield Mariner, was Phil Johnston, who is now Sec. of Human Services under Gov. Dukakis. For all those years Johnson represented a district (first Marshfield-Norwell, then Marshfield-Scituate) that was far more conservative than he. He did so by running an aggressive first campaign in a three-way race in the Watergate year of 1974. Once he was in he worked hard for his district, won the respect of many conservatives and Republicans, and by 1978 had himself a safe seat. In 1983 he passed the seat on to a somewhat less liberal Democrat, Frank Hynes, who himself now labors hard for that district and has what is probably a safe seat.

Johnston's 1974 opponents, Republican Sam Spencer and the then Marshfield Moderator Phil Nectow, were strong candidates; but they were outspent and out-organized by Johnston. Spencer, running without much state Republican Party support, tried again in 1976, and then prudently gave up chasing after Johnston. Johnston's later opponents tended to be lightweights who were too ill-informed to comprehend the odds against them. The result was a politically anomaly: one of the most liberal Democrats in the state representing a moderate to conservative district. Under Hynes the anomaly is less pronounced but probably continues to obtain.

The story of this seat, a Republican seat into the 1970s, and a moderate to conservative seat to this day, is typical of legislative seats throughout the state. By dint of Democratic competence and Republican neglect seats Republicans once held and might have a shot at taking back have gotten conceded, and eventually the districts involved developed a Democratic habit.

To reverse this trend, one which finds liberal Democrats representing moderate and potentially Republican districts throughout suburban Boston, Republicans need to beat the bushes for good legislative candidates, then they need to back them. The suburbs are the battleground, for the Democrats have a natural advantage in the cities while the Republicans have a natural advantage in the rural areas. It is in the suburbs that the two parties will fight it out, and it is in essence because for two decades the Republicans have conceded the suburbs that while the Reagan revolution nationally goes on and on, we continue to live in the most heavily Democratic state of them all.

The third thing the Republicans need is a good ethnic strategy. Any successful political party must be open to all—the somewhat inaccurate perception that the Republican Party has been the exclusive fiefdom of the Yankee has been a minor factor in its decline. But a successful political party must also go where the numbers are, and in Massachusetts that must mean the inclusion of Irish Catholics in much larger measure than has been the case to date.

We are at a point in history when the Irish Catholic vote, like the suburban vote, is up for grabs, and therein lies a great Republican opportunity. Traditionally poor, urban, and Democratic, the typical Massachusetts Irish Catholic has become successful and suburban. Conservative by nature, he has seen the Party of his parents and grandparents move to the left on a wide range of issues.

Yet the Democratic habit runs deep, and while he may have voted for that handsome Irish-American Ronald Reagan, he continues to vote Democratic in local elections. But if the Massachusetts Democratic Party does not move to the center with all deliberate speed, the typical Irish Catholic contemplating his options from his home in Cohasset, Scituate and the like may discover something he probably should have discovered 20 years ago: he has far more in common with Yankee and other Republicans than he has with the activists now running the Massachusetts Democratic Party.

I doubt the Democrats will leave the ideological "window of opportunity" open for the Republicans for long. Just as Peter Martin is more conservative than his distinguished father, a generation of young Democrats is coming along, a generation that is innocent of the bitter turmoil of the Viet Nam/Watergate period. Surely this generation will move the Democratic Party back to the popular political center where it has always thrived.

So the Republicans must act. They must act while the flower of Reaganism is still fresh and before the Democrats have time to act to renew themselves. They must act to go after disaffected Democrats of whom there are many and who come in all ethnic stripes and from all walks of life. But Republicans particularly need to go after Irish-Americans who will bring both voting numbers and an historic gift for politics.

Above all, Republicans must follow a bottom-up strategy that goes after House and Senate seats. A fellow like Frank Hynes, who, as Phil Johnston was before him, is a superior legislator, should not get a free ride for re-election as he will and as Johnston essentially did in his later terms. I've here picked on Hynes and Johnston both because I know the history of their district (for I once ran for the seat myself) and because the history of that district is so symptomatic of how once Republican seats went Democratic and now get conceded to the Democrats without a serious fight.

The word "fight" is a good word to end this series on. The Democratic Party, despite its flirtation with the ideology of pacificism in the last 20 years, has never lost sight of the fact that politics ultimately devolves to competition . . . in other words a "fight." Republicans—Massachusetts Republicans I mean—seem to have come to see politics as a demeaning exercise that is justified only as a distasteful duty. Such an attitude has led to the concession without a serious fight of scores of legislative seats in every recent biennial election; this year it will apparently lead to the concession without a serious fight of the governorship itself.

If Republicans are to begin to attract wavering Democrats and start regaining legislative seats; if they are ever to hope to regain the governorship or our U.S. Senate seats, they first need to get up from the low point where they are and start fighting for themselves and what they believe in. With some fight in them I imagine they will find a way of putting the political, ideological, and ethnic pieces together. But if they do not show some fight, and soon, all those wavering Democrats will waver on home, and Massachusetts will continue to be known as the Mississippi of the north. That, by the way, is an insult to modern Mississippi: as a one-party state we stand alone.

S. S. Music Circus changes with the times

By Judith Montminy
Special to the Mariner

"We have to change. We can't stand still on last year's success." South Shore Music Circus producer Ron Rawson, who has headed the well-known summer theatre for 19 years, has seen many changes at the Cohasset theatre.

When he first came to the South Shore, musicals, operettas and packaged shows were the standard fare. Now the theatre-in-the-round offers approximately 50 attractions in one season. The switch to variety and concert attractions took place in the late 60s, with stars performing in Cohasset for a week at a time.

Economic factors and audience preferences have led Rawson to present one-night concerts, with few performers here for longer runs.

The summer theatre circuit used to boast of 35-40 theatres similar to the South Shore Music Circus. Now one-fourth remain viable enterprises. Rawson expects to continue operating the theatre as he does now, perhaps with greater emphasis on younger attractions in the future. Younger audiences are willing to travel further to see performers they like. Although patrons come from all over, the bulk of Music Circus audience members live on the South Shore.

Even the younger patrons are more likely to come see pop-rock, soft rock, and rhythm and blues groups rather than heavy metal groups, Rawson said. He does not plan to bring the aggressive, heavy metal sounds to Cohasset. Yet people forget that rock is 35-years-old, he said. "It is our American music today."

More so than in the past, Rawson finds wide differences between the entertainment preferences of different age groups.

"The so-called 'family attractions' are virtually non-existent today," he said. Except for ice shows and circuses, very young people, teenagers, and older audiences want to see very different shows. Rawson gears his slate of shows to his audience's taste.

For the first time, this year the South Shore Music Circus is not offering its usual weekly subscription series.

In the past, a patron could buy a season seat for a particular night and attend the theatre every week religiously.

Because of the vast difference in show offerings on each night of the week, Rawson has put together a different package plan to appeal to specific audience tastes.

Although long-time subscribers may still buy "their" seats, new subscribers are offered three series of seven or eight shows each: middle-of-the-road, middle-of-the-road contemporary, and very contemporary.

Children's theatre productions are presented Thursday mornings, and are appropriate for audience members as young as 4 or 5 years old.

"People enjoy coming to the Music Circus," Rawson said. With 2300 seats and no obstructed views, he said audiences are afforded an intimacy they can't find in larger settings. No seat at the Music Circus is further from the stage than 50 feet; there are 20 rows of seats.

With a background in announcing and theatre which took Rawson from Iowa to New York to the South Shore, he said he still misses presenting booked plays. But the Variety newspaper on his desk sported the banner headline: " 'Fabulous Invalid' Is Still Sick." If shows are not coming out of Broadway, the regional theatres find themselves at a loss. In addition, as plays become more technical and sophisticated, they can't be reproduced in summer theatre settings.

Although the Music Circus opened in Cohasset in 1951, its beginnings are rooted in the 1930's. In 1932, the Cohasset Town Hall housed one season of summer theatre, produced by Raymond Moore, the founder of the Cape Playhouse in Dennis, Mass.

Long-time Cohasset resident, the late Helen Vosoff, appeared onstage during the 1932 season. She later became an original member of the Music Circus Board of Directors.

Although Moore is said to have lost more than $50,000 that first season, one of his directors, Alexander Dean, decided to continue the project on his own.

With Yale Drama School connections, Dean brought Sylvia Sydney, Cyril Ritchard, Arthur Treacher and Edward Everett Horton to Cohasset. In 1933, the South Shore Players played to local audiences. After Dean's death in 1939, his wife continued the operation until World War II.

Around 1949, the English actress Gertrude Lawrence submitted an idea for a tent threatre-in-the-round to a group of Cohasset residents who wanted to have a local performing arts center. The tent design was based on an idea by St. John Terrell, an actor and former carnival performer.

The site chosen was the old Horse Show Grounds of the Bancroft Estate, the present location of the South Shore Music Circus. The Music Circus opened on June 25, 1951 with a production of "Show Boat."

The resident company was soon replaced by "package" productions which toured from theatre to theatre with major "star" names. When Rawson was hired to revive the ailing theatre, concert attractions replaced the musical plays.

In 1975, the main theatre bowl was converted from wooden risers to a concrete structure; in 1977 the canvas chairs were replaced with permanent seating.

The Music Circus is a non-profit organization and distributes revenues above costs to charitable, artistic and educational organizations throughout the communities of the South Shore. For the past 35 years, other non-profit groups have benefited from the Music Circus through the annual grants of the South Shore Playhouse Associates' Community Trust Fund.

Correction

A typographical error in last week's "Summer Focus" incorrectly said the earned income of the Nickerson Theatre in Norwell.

The article should have read, "The Nickerson Theatre earns 110 percent of its operating costs and receives no grants or contributions." Most regional theatres only earn 64 percent of their operating costs.

ANGLER'S CORNER

by Bill Smith

Flycasting well enough to catch fish

One of the most enjoyable but least understood ways of angling is fly fishing. To the inexperienced, fly fishing often appears to be a highly technical and complicated sport, best left to the expert.

To the contrary, with proper equipment and minimal instruction, the beginner will be able to fly cast well enough to catch fish.

Fly fishing is among the most effective and rewarding ways of catching fish. A skilled fly fisherman will often catch more and bigger fish than the bait or lure fisherman. The fly fisherman's basic tools, flies, best duplicate what most fish feed on.

This article will simplify the basic tackle needed by the beginner. It must be noted, that before purchasing any fly tackle, the beginner should visit a fly fishing specialty shop and discuss his needs with the staff.

The basic difference between fly fishing and spin fishing is that the fly fisherman is not casting a lure or bait which provides weight to pull the running line from the reel.

Instead, in fly fishing, the angler is actually casting a tapered line which brings a weightless fly to the fish. Thus an understanding of basic fly tackle is extremely important. Each component of the tackle—the line, leader, rod and reel—must work together to properly present the fly. This is referred to as a balanced outfit.

Selecting proper fly fishing equipment is not as difficult as it might appear since fly tackle is one of the few aspects of fishing which is standardized. Fly rods and reels are matched to particular fly lines which have a designated weight. The beginner should never purchase any fly rod or line which does not indiciate this accepted code. Al reputable manufacturers follow the fly fishing industries' standards.

The first decision is to select the fly line which best suits the beginners needs. A tapered line is essential to the casting system. Basically, there are two appropriate tapers for the beginner—the double taper or weight forward line. The later is an all purpose line which provides the most distance for the beginner.

However, anyone who will be fishing strictly for trout in small streams will find the double taper the better line. Next, select a line weight which will allow the angler to cast flies which best imitate the food source of the fish the angler seeks. Trout fisherman will find the four, five, and six weight lines best while the largemouth bass fisherman will select either a seven or eight line. A final decision will be to select the proper line density, floating or sinking. Beginners will find the floating line to be the easiest on which to learn proper casting techniques.

The fly rod must balance to the fly line. Graphite rods are lighter, more powerful, and more sensitive than fiberglas. However, these rods tend to be more expensive and in the hands of the beginning fly fisherman are too light. I recommend that beginners select a good quality fiberglas or composite graphite rod.

The fly reel will primarily be used to store the line and backing. But at times, when fighting a large fish, it must provide enough drag to tire the fish. Single action fly reels which provide a direct one-to-one retrieve ratio are more than adequate for the beginner.

An important aspect of the balanced fly fishing outfit, but the least understood, is the tapered leader which must be strong enough to hold a hooked fish but small enough to provide an invisible link between the highly visible fly line and the fly. The length of the leader will be dictated by the type of fly, the fish, and the water. In general, when fishing dry flies for trout in clear water, the angler will need to use a long, fine tapered leader. However, when fishing for bass with large flies in local ponds, a short heavy leader is best.

Flies, the basic terminal tackle used by fly fisherman, are carefully designed and hand crafted from natural materials to duplicate the food source of fish. There are a great variety of flies with which anglers must become familiar. This process takes time and experience. Beginners should at least become aware of the differences between dry flies, nymphs, streamers, and wet flies.

As a general recommendation, the beginner will do best with an eight to 8 1/2 ' rod balance to a number 6-8 weight line with a weight forward taper. A tapered leader, nine feet long in a mid-range size of 4X will cover most fishing situations encountered by the beginner. My next column will explore fly casting and fly fishing techniques.

Nostalgia: All the world is odd but 'thee and me'

By Dorothy Squier
Special to the Mariner

To finish the quote; "but thee and me, Rachel, and sometimes even thou art queer."

Surely you've met a few of these eccentrics and so have I. Some not too far out but just a bit odd. Here's a few I've known, but judge for yourself.

Oddie one. Driving home from an antiquing trip to the Berkshires, I explained to my friend, "Malcolm, you know you'd never have been admitted inside that house without me. These people were old family friends. I'd like to have first refusal on the stuff you bought at the same price you paid, just in case they might go out of your hands."

"Fair enough," he said as he turned into his driveway, climbed the hill and parked.

We unloaded the station wagon, easily lifting a Persian rug about 18x20 woven in magnificent colors and so soft and supple it folded to the size of a pillow; then three delicate pieces of Louis Quinze gilded furniture with hand-painted backs; a couple of tooled leather floor cushions with leather tassels; besides the handleless cup he'd stolen from the dining room plate rail.

His mother (an elderly W.A.S.P. if ever you met one) greeted us from her wing chair as her one and only offspring unfolded the rug under her covetous gaze. She wore a dark blue dress with a soiled lace collar.

"It doesn't quite fit," she said, "We'll have to turn it under in front of the fireplace."

As he put down the Persian, Malcolm explained the details of my request. She drew in her breath with an inverted hiss, glared at me and said, "I keep an axe behind my kitchen door for people like you."

I fled the house and didn't return until after she died some years later. He'd asked me to help him clear out her room. I was tackling the closet and reached for a navy felt hat on the shelf. As I lifted it the brim came off in my hand. God knows how long the moths had been at it. I was bent over laughing and he got mad and took me home. Talk about a couple of $3 bills!

Oddie Two. My adored Aunt Stina wore boned collars of net or lace, which of course kept her head high, and always a white ribbon on her dress. She was one of the early members of the W.C.T.U. That's the Women's Christian Temperance Union. After Uncle Wallace died of a liver ailment, she came to live with her daughter's family on Linnaean Street.

It was there I brought my fiance to meet her. During the talk, Frank mentioned President Roosevelt. Aunt Sinta wrinkled her thin nose and in her cultured voice said, "Don't speak that name in this house. He slid in on a wet plank!"

Ever one to grasp at any opportunity to further her favorite cause, she went on. "And how sinful it is for a company to dare use the name of God's beautiful flowers for whiskey. Four Roses!" She looked at me, "Don't you agree, dear Dorothy?"

Frank's eyebrows shot up when I nodded. I couldn't let her down. I adored Aunt Sinta, and don't we all have our little quirks?

Oddie Three. An octogenarian, Cousin Cora lived with her husband on Commonwealth Avenue, somewhere between Dartmouth and Exeter Streets, and on a fine day could be seen walking down the Avenue through the Public Garden and across the Common to R.H. Stearns. It was there she bought her own clothes and those of her grandchildren, like any true Bostonian.

They belonged to the Eastern Yacht Club and had a home on Marblehead Neck. But in the early summer they enjoyed staying at the Melrose on Cape Cod.

A cousin to my good friend Sally, Cora was a large woman with an imposing carriage and a deep, booming voice. Sally and I were her guests at lunch in the spinster-filled dining room on the Cape. They'd been discussing a third cousin when Coa bellowed in indignation. "Why Sally, of course you know what happened to Cousin Elsie. Poor thing, she died of syphilis."

A hush fell over the room. Oh, my! Sometimes you wish the floor would open up and swallow you.

Oddie Four. Phoebe Watson lived on the Cape and used to substitute once in a while in our weekly bridge game. She played a good game but she talked incessantly about her salad days, the Baltimore Cotillion and her debut. Her memory really wasn't all that good, either.

She told us about a visit to her doctor and how upset she was when he suggested that she cut down on her intake of alcohol.

"Why, Doctor!" she told him. "What on earth are you talking about? I am indignant that you should even think such a thing! Alcohol! Why, Doctor I never touch anything but rum!"

Phoebe was funny. But she enjoyed life. And she knew her cards.

Oddie Five. When I lived in Connecticut, Fern Thornton had invited my niece and me to dinner and we drove across the State line admiring the October foliage, into a town near Poughkeepsie. The house was high on a hill overlooking a valley. We came to a red brick wall, drove through the gates and around to the back where Fern greeted us at the kitchen door.

Pot holders in her hand, she stood leaning against the stove as we went through the small talk about our families. Because the kitchen was hot, I finally shrugged out of my heavy sweater. Fern apologized, took our wraps and offered us a sherry, which she poured from a bottle on the counter.

"I started cooking a little early, so we're almost ready. "The roast is done. I just have to put in the biscuits."

Sherries in hand, we walked into the dining room where the table was set for three. A striking Rose Medallion platter graced the center and on it was curled in blissful sleep a fluffy grey kitten.

Fran laughed, "Quite a centerpiece. If you like cats."

I called out to the kitchen. "Fern, your cat is on the table."

She carried in the roast. "I know, my dear, isn't he simply preshush? That's his favorite spot. It's sunny all afternoon. Have you seen the view? We see all over the valley. I'm so sorry John isn't home. He'll be sorry he missed you." She mumbled her way to the kitchen and brought in the vegetables.

While she was gone Fran removed the kitten from the platter. We watched the carving of the roast, an awkward struggle with a dull knife, and exchanged looks trying to keep from laughing. The house was cold. The vegetables were cold and the meat was cold and very, very tough. We were struggling through the meal when Fern cried, "Oh, good heavens, I forgot the biscuits."

She pushed open the swinging door to the kitchen and was met with billowing clouds of black smoke. We rushed to open windows on all sides and I rushed for my sweater as the October winds swooped through the house.

With the air cleared and charred biscuits disposed of, we begged Fern to forego dessert. Fran made coffee while I put the dishes in the washer. We drank the coffee in the kitchen, admonished Fern to get to bed, and left.

By the time we reached the bottom of the hill we were laughing so hard I had to pull over and stop.

"Was she drunk?" I asked.

"Was she ever!" came the answer.

You should never keep sipping the sherry when you're cooking dinner for company.

Various books for a summer reading list

By Peggy Beals
FROM THE bookshelf

Herein, brief reviews of books I've enjoyed and readers have recommended. Still waiting, hope springing eternal, to go in a library and see a patron with one of these columns in hand, finding these titles!

Everyone Here Spoke Sign Language. Nora Ellen Groce (Harvard Univ. Press, 1985).

Seems there was a time when almost one out of four people living on Martha's Vineyard shared hereditary deafness. This social history about it is informative, witty and valuable in showing how such a disability can be accepted and shared by a hospitable community.

Thanks to Ann of Marshfield for the information.

Lucia Lives

"I never expected another Lucia this side of heaven!" says Kingston reader Betty, recommending Lucia in Wartime. Tom Holt has taken the famous characters created by E.F. Benson and continued the immensely funny series, examining minutely the teacup tempests in a little English village. A welcome addition to a treasured series.

Joan Aiken does similar in Mansfield Revisited, borrowing Jane Austen's Mansfield crowd and satisfying our curiosity as to what happened next.

Another old favorite author, Angela Thirkell, set a fine example when she reopened the doors to Anthony Trollope's English county of Barchester and wrote so many infinitely re-readable novels about its people. What a blessing the little English village has been to readers!

Break In by Dick Francis, another good suspense story by a favorite. He's back to the horse world with a jockey whose brother-in-law becomes a victim. Compulsive.

While this is still recent, we were surprised to see it already in a Reader's Digest Condensed Book. These books have so much good reading but are absolute dead weight in the book world. You can't give them away. If you would like to stock your summer cottage, offer reading to your bed and breakfast guests, encourage your teens to read this summer, they're excellent. Most libraries and yard sales have them available.

The Autobiography of Chuck Yeager has become one of those books a wide range of ages enjoy. Another good one for that high schooler who hates to read or to the man who won't pick out books for himself.

Just Off Fifth by Edith Begner is a sleeper, a slim book no one has ever heard of and a beguiling read. A librarian plucked it out of a carton of donated books and we've found it delightful. The story of people in an apartment house and the problems of communal living. Good memorable characters in a neat story.

Royal Service by Stephen Barry, recommended by Florence in Marshfield. I took it out with skepticism and read it right straight through. Barry was valet to Prince Charles for 12 years, and how royalty live can rid you of envy, despite the glamour and money. "I'd rather be me than royalty."

Reminded me of another close look at the famous Blair House where important visitors to D.C. are put up.

A Light in the Attic, poems and drawings by Shel Silverstein.

This has a fantastic record run on the N. Y. Times' Best Seller List. I chanced to pick it up and found it such fun I read some of it to a four-year-old and a seven-year-old to their immense joy. The poems are fresh, funny, relevant and I'm afraid I'm going to have to buy a copy.

Smaller Than Most by Shirley Lincoln Rigby, illustrated by Debby L. Carter. Good picture book for tinies. Won Ton is a panda who hears that his family is growing, meaning adding a new member, and is cheered because he wants to grow! Three stories center around the event. The attractive illustrations pass the important test of having something for the children to look at on each page as the adult reads. Harper, Row, $11.50.

Ah, Sweet Mystery

M.M. Kay's Death in Andamans reads like a Nancy Drew working with the Hardy Boys, but it's a good read. Set in the great days of the British Empire, the young heroine goes out from London's cold and wet to visit the British Colony which you all are aware is in the vicinity of the Bay of Bengal. Mystery, romance, diversion.

Reginal Hill is new to me, recommended by Barbara of Marshfield, and good. Witty, beautifully woven English village mystery featuring Supt. Andrew Dalziel. April Shower gets him marooned in a strange household, electric with secrets which he sorts out.

Coat of Arms

What's in a name? The French Sautelle

By Frank Keady
Special to the Mariner

Even an unusual profession like a jumper or tumbler-type performer provided a surname. For the French name of Sautelle was derived from a nickname literally meaning a jumper or even perhaps a grasshopper.

There is undoubtedly some association with the tournament games for the knights in which jumping and horsemanship were standard events.

Although this is the generally accepted French meaning of the word, it has also been suggested that the name may have developed from "Psalterer" or "Sautreor," meaning a player on the psaltery, a stringed instrument similar to a harp which was very popular in ancient times.

Unquestionably of French origin, and still recognized as a well-known French name, the surname took a different form in England where it appeared somewhat later. There it was found as Salter, Saulter, Sauter and Sawter. The English derivation is from the Old English "Sealtere," meaning a maker or seller of salt.

William ie Sautreour was minstrel to the Lady Margaret, Queen of England in 1304. From the spelling of his name, he was probably from France.

If you would like a history of your family name and a facsimilty of your Coat of Arms, please send $3, plus self-addressed envelope to IS THIS YOU, P.O.Box 807 Westwood, MA 02090.

Arrangements can be made for full color reproduction.

Mixed reviews for 'So Long on Lonely Street'

After its pre-Broadway run at Norwell's Nickerson Theatre earlier this year, "So Long On Lonely Street" opened to mixed reviews in New York. It played 61 performances, but was hailed as an artistic triumph by Time magazine.

Cohasset's J. Arnold Nickerson became an investor in the show and recently announced that Samuel French has made the play available to regional theatres. Because of the favorable Time review, Nickerson expects the play will find a long life on the regional theatre circuit.

He said Jessica Lange and Sam Shepard have shown an interest in the possibility of a movie version of the play and have asked for copies of the script.

Producers of the play, including Nickerson, retain worldwide rights and residual rights for any agreements signed within the next 10 years.

Colleagues will miss McArthur's expertise

By Jane Lane
Mariner Staff

After 20 years, selectman Mary Jane McArthur resigned from the seat she held the past five years.

In a brief written statement to the board, MacArthur said she was leaving June 30 for "personal reasons."

On summer vacation in Maine, McArthur has been unavailable for comment. But acting chairman Diane Sullivan explained, "she hasn't felt 100 percent. And her physician said it was aggravated by stress. She's functioning well and it's not serious. But it was best she leave this board."

At the conclusion of McArthur's vacation, the longtime political activist will remain a member of the watershed protection study committee. "She'll be back in the fall," Sullivan emphasized.

Executive secertary Donald Andrew added, "she told me in the future, she'll probably be interested in serving on other boards and committees.

At Monday night's selectmen meeting, Sullivan read the letter submitted by McArthur to the board members. "Since 1960, I have served the town in a number of positions," the former selectman wrote. "I hope I have helped better the town of Cohasset. My interests in the town continue."

Rocco Laugelle, a longtime political associate of McArthur's moved to accept the resignation with regret. "I hope in some capacity she will continue to serve the town. She made great, great contributions," he said.

Laugelle continued, "She passed on to me her great knowledge and experience. The selectmen have lost a very valuable member. I have the greatest admiration for her. I hate to see her not a part of this board."

Following the meeting, Laugelle recalled the five years he spent alongside his admired colleague and friend.

"You can't imagine how I feel," he said Monday night. "I've been affiliated with her since she came into Cohasset politics. I've been against her many times, and with her. I feel so strongly about this; we're losing a great person. She'll be hard to replace."

Henry Ainslie was chairman of the board when McArthur was elected to the first of her two terms. It was a three-member board which included Ainslie, McArthur and Laugelle.

No special, board says

There will be no special election to fill the vacancy created by this week's resignation of chairman Mary Jane McArthur.

Citing the additional expense of holding a special election, selectmen voted unanimously Monday night not to call for a special election.

"We just had a special town meeting. A special election could cost the town another $4,500. I don't think we should have it," selectman Rocco Laugelle said. "There are four of us here, there were three for many years. I think we can stay with four until the regular election (in April, 1987)."

John McNabb Jr., an unsuccessful candidate for selectmen in the April, 1986 election, said he will be among those petitioning for a special election. Two hundred signatures must be submitted to the town clerk's office for a

Thousands flock to town for a shot at stardom

It wasn't so much the confusion, the heat from the brilliant sunshine, or the nervousness about auditioning for a major motion picture.

What will long be remembered before any cameras arrive in town, before any famous actors grace our streets, are those lines. No one will forget the snake-like, swerving line of humans that meandered in around the Deer Hill School parking lot - that spilled onto Sohier Street and poured down the hill to the Music Circus property.

Estimates as high as 6,000, more realistically 4,000 persons, came to Cohasset early Sunday morning. They came not to worship in our community, but to grasp at a chance for immortality in the celluloid world of Hollywood and the movies.

The majority of patiently-waiting persons never entered the audition hall. But they will have their opportunity.

In response to the overwhelming numbers of people who attended Sunday's tryouts, The Casting Company of Boston has announced a second chance for local residents.

Anyone who is still interested in working as an extra in "The Witches of Eastwick" should send a photograph and brief personal resume to The Casting Company, 132 Brookline Avenue, Boston, Mass. 02215.

These people will be considered along with the others previously auditioned at the formal tryout session.

According to Raquel Osborne of The Casting Company, more than 1,000 persons were interviewed in Cohasset on Sunday. The casting firm will pare that number down to a "core" of 100-150 persons for recurring roles in the movie.

"They'll be, you know, like neighbors or store owners. People the major characters would see on a fairly regular basis as they walk through town," Osborne said.

Several hundred others, she noted, will be used at various times at different locations.

Speaking at the conclusion of the four-hour auditions Sunday, Osborne said the session "went well, not bad really," she commented. "I think this is Six young people from Cohasset will have the chance to live with French families and work for one month in Souppes-sur-Loing, Cohasset's French sister city.

Mayor Victor Prudhomme offered last week to take three young people in July and three more in August.

Rene Dine, chairman of the French town's cultural exchange committee, said during a reception last Saturday at the Lothrop House, "The boys might work as lifeguards or sailing or windsurfing instructors. There might be other jobs they could do, where language would not be a problem."

Cohasset residents filled the Lothrop House on a muggy afternoon to greet Mayor Prudhomme, his wife Violette, their grandaughter, Diane, 13, Dine, and his wife, France.

Mary Lou Lawrence, publicist for the cultural exchange committee, said about 200 people attended the reception.

Lawrence said she hopes the visit by the Prudhommes and the Dines will encourage Cohasset

Library computer saves staff time

Within two years, the Paul Pratt Memorial Library will enter the world of computerization.

Last month, Cohasset joined 20 other communities in the Old Colony Library Network. The contract signed in June will enable Cohasset readers to acquire more volumes, more materials and more information than ever before.

The automation of lending library services is long overdue, according to director Richard Hayes. But conversely, the more computerized services offered by the library, the more personalized service will be available by the members of the library staff.

Instead of spending hours filing card catalogue cards, searching for requested materials, or completing overdue notices, library assistants will be available to serve the public in a direct manner.

The Old Colony Network is the first computerized

Selectmen unanimously voted to extend the terms of three members of the zoning board of appeals. They include: Terence Farrell until 1988; Barbara Power until 1989; and associate member E. Woodward Chittick until 1989.

District member needed

Selectmen are seeking a candidate for a three-year term on the Cohasset Common Historic District Commission.

Member Gordon Stevenson has decided to resign from the committee. The new member would fill the remainder of Stevenson's term.

Anyone interested in serving on the committee should contact the selectmen's office at town hall.

Setting record straight

Perspective selectman candidate John McNabb Jr. informed selectmen June 21 that he included an erroneous statement on his March campaign literature.

McNabb ran unsuccessfully in April for a seat on the board of selectmen.

In his letter to selectmen, McNabb said James Hoy of Border Street was incorrectly quoted as saying he was concerned about the failure of the Board to consider the merits of the land bank program.

"That statement was not made by Mr. Hoy," McNabb wrote to selectmen. "I apologize to him and the board for this error, for which I take full responsibility. I am unable to explain how the error occurred, but realize that I should have been more careful before sending out this piece of literature."

A bewitching plea

The official international spokesman of the Witches League for Public Awareness, Laurie Cabot of Salem, has asked Warner Brothers to remove the word 'witch' from the title of the upcoming movie scheduled to be filmed in Cohasset.

"I realize the discontinuance of this production is not probable," she wrote to Rob Friedman of Warner Brothers publicity. "The Witches League for Public Awareness asks Warner Brothers remove and replace the word 'witch' in the film title ("The Witches of Eastwick") and script with some term denoting Satanism and/or include a disclaimer, pre-approved by the Witches League, at the beginning of the film, explaining to audiences that this film in no way depicts real witches or pagans."

In her letter to Hollywood, Cabot noted "the inaccurate and negative portrayal of "witches" as ruthless, bloodthirsty Satan worshippers who participate in black masses and resort to murder and violence to achieve their desires, is an infringement of our religious right and is harmful, slanderous and laicious."

She explained the inaccurate portrayal of witches in the John Updike novel is a violation of their Constitutionally-guaranteed civil rights to practice religious freedom.

Correction

In an article published last week in the Cohasset Mariner Mary Jane McArthur was incorrectly identified as the chairperson of the citizen's petition to review alternatives to the Ward sewer plant.

McArthur, who at town meeting time last week was chairman of the board of selectmen, was not chairman of the citizens' petition drive. McArthur did not attend town meeting last week. Selectmen did not endorse the petition. They agreed to submit it into the special town meeting warrant in behalf of the citizens' group.

Spokesman for the citizens' group at town meeting last week was Katherine Stanton of Old Pasture Road.

Dump closed July 4

The Cedar Street Landfill will be closed Friday, July 4, due to the holiday.

It has been noted that on occasion persons have left trash at the gates of the landfill when found to be closed. Plese be advised this is prohibited and in violation of the Regulations for Resident/Hauler Use of Cedar Street Landfill. With the exception of holidays, the landfill is opened from 7:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. every day of the week except Mondays and Wednesdays.

In addition, the Board of Health recently adopted a new regulation which prohibits scavenging in specific areas of the landfill due to potential danger in those locations. Please be advised that for obvious reasons no one shall be allowed to remove anything from the whiteware(metal) recycling area or the rear portions of the landfill at anytime.

The health board wishes to remind persons that it is advisable to cover all materials being transported to the dump in open car trunks or trucks. There have been some problems with items falling or blowing onto the roadways.

If you have not obtained your dump sticker as yet, expiration date of this year's permit is June 30, 1986. Permits can be purchased from the Recreation Department at the Town Hall or at the Police Department during normal hours for a fee of six dollars which will allow entrance to the landfill and parking for the beach.

CCC elects board members

Four new members were elected to the Community Center board of directors.

At the May meeting, Jack Conway of 11 North Main Streeet, Harold Litchfield of 171 Beechwood Street, Matthew Sullivan of 15 Nichols Road, and high school senior, Melissa Shea of 45 Windy Hill Road, were elected to the present board.

The board wishes to thank David Leahy, Vincent Nardo, Marty Cory, and Judy Volungas for their work on the board for the last three years.

The start of additions and alterations at the center mark the beginning of a new and exciting period in the Center's forty-three year history. New programs, expansion of existing programs, and better facilities for the present Senior Center are among the goals of the center.

The new membership year for the center begins in September. The Board plans to continue to increase membership for the year 1986-1987 to at least one thousand members.

Cohasset All-Stars compete

South Shore Little League All-Stars recognized the 4th of July as well as Scituate's 350th anniversary last weekend, as Dave Morin brought together teams from Scituate, Hingham, Norwell and Cohasset for a round-robin tournament in Scituate.

Hingham defeated Scituate in the final, 9-3, for its fourth straight win of the weekend. Standout Dave Parillo led the way, striking out 11 and homering twice.

In Saturday's action, Scituate defeated Cohasset, 14-2, and Norwell, 17-13. Meanwhile, Hingham beat Cohasset, 19-0, and Norwell, 14-9.

Sunday, Norwell edged Cohasset, 5-3, and Hingham shut out Scituate, 2-0, behind the pitching of Chris Keeley.

July 14 selectmen's meeting to discuss dogs

The conversation turned to canines Monday night as selectmen discussed the status of unrestrained dogs.

The discussion will continue July 14 when selectmen will review residents' complaints about unleashed dogs, and the high number of unlicensed canines in town.

According to Officer Richard Yokum, dogs ordered to be restrained by selectmen are on the loose within months. He also notified them there is currently no shelter to house the unlicensed, unrestrained dogs.

The animal control officer is authorized by law to order a dog banished from the town if it is found unrestrained after being so ordered by selectmen. But that process, he said, could take up to two months to finalize. The other alternative, he noted, is to kill the unleashed canine.

"I want people put on notice," he warned selectmen. "I'm going to kill the dog. I'm going to use the town's leash law to the limit.

"Selectmen order a dog restrained and for half a year it's good," he continued. "I can kill him, or I can take it to court and fine them. But that costs money - I need compensation for my time in court. About a month after ordering a dog leashed, they don't anything. It takes another two months to order a dog out of town. The last time I did that, it took two months."

Selectman James Gallagher concurred with Yokum's complaints, saying, "it seems like the dogs are running the town of Cohasset. It's time to support the rules and regulations of this town. We have to sit down with some stiff rules.

"If a dog is a nuisance," he added, "I feel it is the responsibility of the owner. It's not fair to the dog."

The conversation began earlier when Mandel Road resident Paul Mattes returned to selectmen for a third time, complaining about barking dogs next door on Summer Street.

Selectmen previously order two dogs owned by Debra Lagos of 86A Summer St., restrained inside her home. Mattes complained that the dogs when restrained outside, constantly barked and disturbed his peace during the day.

This past weekend, he told selectmen, there was a BB or bullet shot through a window of his home, a sign was ripped off his property, and there was a dog fight on the lawn of the Lagos' property.

"When I call the police," he said, "the police say they'll tell the dog officer. If he's not around, my problem isn't solved. Rich (Officer Yokum) has tried. I don't know what he or I can do. I can't go on their property, I just wish you could be there when this happens."

Selectman Diane Sullivan emphasized the town's leash law requires all dogs to be restrained and contained on the owner's property. "I'm inclined to request that the (Lagos') dogs be banished. I don't like to say that without her (Lagos) being here, so we'll ask her to be here July 14."

Gallagher concurred, saying selectmen have "given her every opportunity to keep the dogs inside."

"This is total harassment," Sandra Matttes acknowledged. "The vulgarness, the bullet, the sign. I've had it with the whole issue."

Selectman Rocco Laugelle suggested Mattes obtain a copy of the police report detailing the number of complaints made by Mattes about the two Summer Street dogs.

In a related matter, Officer Yokum told selectmen there is currently no kennel where he can bring unlicensed, unrestrained dogs from Cohasset.

"The private kennel in town has been filled for a month and a half," he said, adding that other kennels in Hingham and Weymouth will not accept the catches from Cohasset.

When asked where he currently brings the dogs he captures, Officer Yokum replied, "no where. We're not using anyone right now."

The animal control officer explained he and his fellow officers in Hingham and Hull are trying to work out a regional solution to their similar problems. He said they are trying to encourage construction of a privately-owned kennel within the area for use by the three towns. When asked why the kennel should be privately-owned, Yokum replied, "I don't think the town wants to spend $200-300,000 on an animal shelter."

Although a Rte. 3A site was suggested, selectmen said a veteran's group intends to use the property for a new veteran's post.

When asked by selectmen to explain his working hours, Officer Yokum said he just responds to complaints. "Some days I work eight hours, and other days I work none," he said. He averages 10-20 calls a week for the parttime job, answering complaints about stray or barking dogs.

While on duty as a police officer, Yokum said he sometimes checks on areas where he has ordered a dog restrained.

Officer Yokum requested a warrant from selectmen which would allow him to go onto private property when he is retrieving a loose animal. Yokum, who told selectmen this is authorized under Chapter 140 of the general laws, said he has been previously granted this authority.

Town counsel Richard Henderson said he will review the state law before advising selectmen to grant the warrant.

Local students win art awards

Five Cohasset students received awards this past weekend at the South Shore Arts Festival, which was held on the Cohasset Common.

The awards for art in the schools is co-sponsored by the Patriot Ledger and the South Shore Art Center.

Entries from 11 South Shore school systems showed a consistently high quality. Jurors were Joan Bracale of Hingham, a scenery designer for the Nickerson Theater; Nanette B. Habershaw of Hingham, a former art teacher; and Frances McLaughlin, a staff advertising artist for the Patriot Ledger and a part-time art teacher. Carol Matzell, educational services coordinator for the Patriot Ledger, organized the exhibit with the cooperation of Susan Kilmartin from the South Shore Art Center.

Cohasset winners were: Jeremiah Stevenson, third grade, Osgood School, first prize, elementary painting and drawing, grades K-3;

David Zadel, fourth grade, Deer Hill School, first prize, elementary painting and drawing, grades 4-6.

Peter Sheppard, sixth grade, Deer Hill School, honorable mention, elementary painting and drawing, grades 4-6.

Heather Lyons, fifth grade, Deer Hill School, Merit Certificate, elementary 3-dimensionalist;

Allie Redfield, ninth grade, Cohasset H.S., Merit Certificate, H.S. photography.

Congratulations to these young artists and to their teachers: Colleen Lucas, CHS, and Jean O'Malley, Deer Hill and Joseph Osgood Schools.

Legal questions delay housing plans

By John O'Donnell
Mariner Staff

A proposal by the housing authority to build low income housing on land controlled by the school department has been put on hold until legal questions are resolved.

The plan, which calls for the housing authority to acquire 24 acres of school property behind the Deer Hill School off of Sohier Street, includes eight housing units designated as an immediate care facility for mentally retarded adults.

The land transfer proposal was to be considered at the June special town meeting, but housing authority chairman John Muncey withdrew the proposal because of legal questions.

"We had legal problems with presenting it," he said. "An attorney recommended we pull it because everything was not legally correct."

Muncey said that the proposal will be presented again in the near future.

"We're coming back with it when we get everything ironed out," he said.

Muncey said that the proposed housing would be built on two of the 24 acres requested. He said that percolation tests have to be performed to find buildable lots on the land.

Until the perc tests are completed it is not known where the building can be constructed nor what the size of the septic system can be.

The housing authority is seeking a state grant for the construction of the low income housing.

"The problem with state programs is that you don't get any money without having buildable land," he said. "It costs money to have tests and studies done."

Included in the proposal are the eight units set aside for mentally retarded adults. The residents would have 24-hour a day supervision by staff from the state Department of Mental Health.

Muncey said that the school land is the most suitable land available in town for the housing project. However, definite plans can't be drawn until the housing authority acquires the land and percolation tests are done.

"We might not be able to build on the 24 acres at all," said Muncey. "Who knows until tests are done?"

Muncey did not specify when the land transfer proposal will be presented again.

Congress approves Minot Lighthouse repairs

Funding for major repairs of Minot Ledge Lighthouse are included in a bill passed last week by Congress.

The 126-year-old lighthouse, called by the late Marshfield historian and writer Edward Rowe Snow, "the most dangerous beacon in America," is among six in Massachusetts earmarked for repairs in an amendment to a supplemental appropriations bill submitted by Sen. Edward Kennedy.

Minot's Ledge light is slated to receive $350,000 of the $750,000 appropriation, according to Lt. Ben Clough of the Coast Guard's Boston office. "It's a top priority," he said.

The work will include removing and refurbishing the light itself and replacing some 10 feet of granite immediately below the light, as well as general maintenance.

Second class petty officer Gregory Creedon said bids would be solicited in October, the beginning of the next fiscal year.

It is difficult to estimate an actual completion date because of the long time required to obtain newly cut granite, he explained.

Passage of the legislation appears likely, said a Kennedy aide. "We are hopeful that the bill will be signed," said Kathy Anderson, legislative assistant to Kennedy.

The first lighthouse to stand on Minot's Ledge was completed in December 1849 but lasted less than two years. The iron pile lighthouse crashed into the sea during a storm in 1851, killing two men.

Construction of the existing stone lighthouse began in 1857 and was finished in the fall of 1860.

Historical Society unveils heritage of harbor

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

Only 100 years ago, Cohasset Harbor was the fourth largest fishing port in New England, behind Boston, Gloucester and New Bedford.

A fleet of 80 fast-sailing schooners would regularly harvest the rich Atlantic fishing banks by day and return to "Ship Cove" at dusk.

The Cohasset Historical Commission this week unveiled The Captains' Walk, a permanent exhibit which describes and depicts the great heritage of the harbor.

The project is the culmination of five years of research and $10,000 in private donations.

Local historian David Wadsworth, a member of both the commission and of the Cohasset Historical Society explained, "The project is based on work the commission had done through a historical survey of the town.

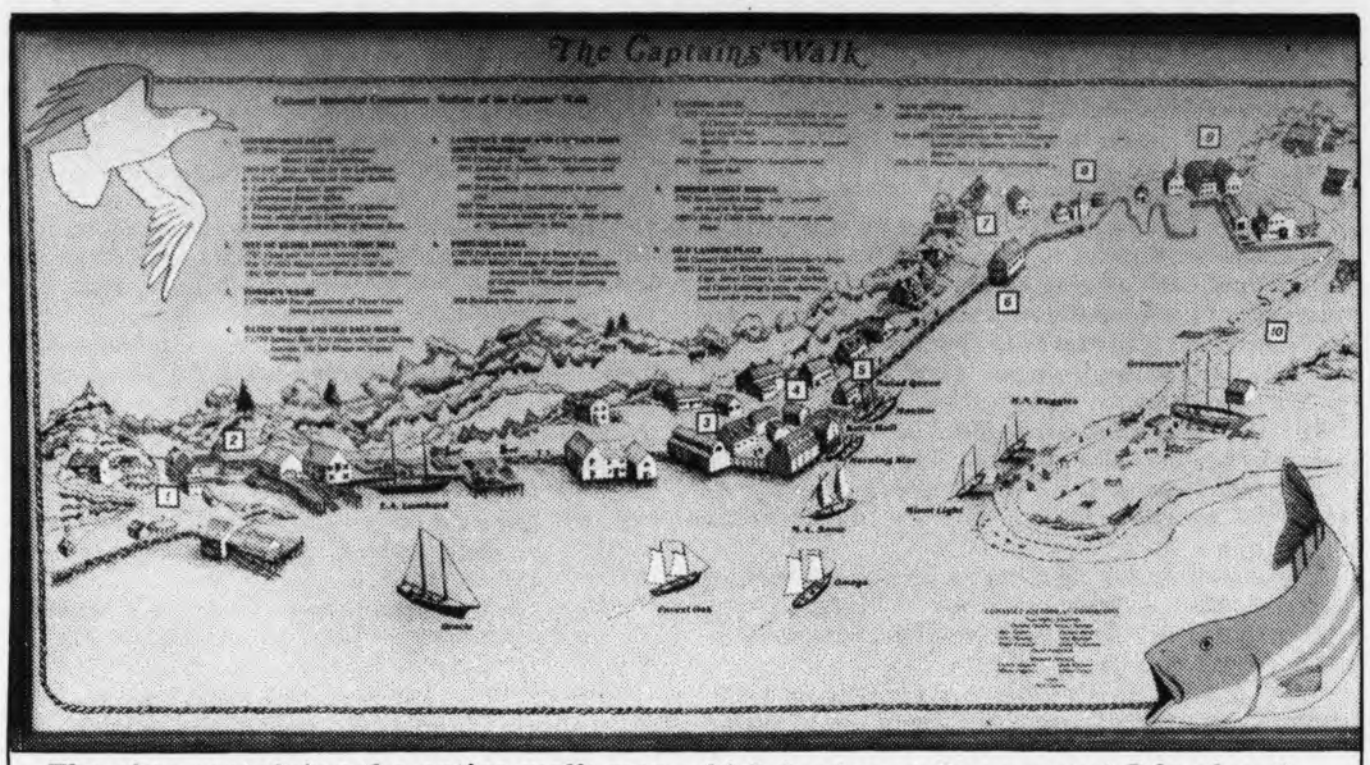
"It was put together from photos and prints of 19th century harbor scenes. It's really quite accurate."

The Captains' Walk consists of three large maps, which outline the entire route from Government Island to the "New Shipyard," where the Yankee Oil Co. is now headquartered.

There are ten stations along the walk; each marker describes a significant point of interest and lists the station donors.

The Captains' Walk begins at Government Island. At this site in the years 1855 through 1860, Minot's Ledge Lighthouse was constructed.

"For its day," Wadsworth said, "it was an engineering marvel. Now, it's a candidate for the National Register of Historic Places."



The sign containing the entire walk map which begins at Government Island and concludes at the "New Shipyard"

Until 1947, this site served as shore station for the lighthouse.

It was donated by Mary and John Fleming.

The next stop is the site of Elisha Doane's Grist Mill.

During the War of 1812, the local militia camped at this tidal mill, built over a natural sluice.

The South Shore Playhouse Association, owners of the Music Circus donated this marker.

Tower's Wharf, a 19th century hub of fishing and mercantile business once stood where Hugo's Lighthouse Restaurant is today.

Through four generations, the Tower family conducted their fishing and trade enterprises here.

Hugo's donated the station.

Captains' Walk is a journey into searfaring past

At Bates' Wharf, you can still find the Old Salt House, a remnant of Samuel Bates' first stone wharf and fishing business, circa 1750.

This station was donated by the friends of Francis Hagerty in his memory.

Hagerty originated the idea for The Captains' Walk, when he suggested labeling the wharves. His question, "Why don't we love the harbor like we love the common?" inspired the commission to create the new trail, explained Noel Ripley, Chairman of the Historical Commision.

The fifth site, Lawrence Wharf and the Captain John Smith memorial, was donated by citizens in memory of Hollis and Emily Gleason.

The Quincy Shipbuilding Division of General Dynamics donated the marker at Portuguese Hall, as well as the pipes that support the three large maps.

The Volunteer Firemen's Association and Legion Hall used to be across the street. In 1850, it served as a Customs and Immigration office for the Port of Cohasset.

This station was dedicated by the commission "to the men and women who served their country in time of need."

The Border Street Bridge was once the site of Caleb Nichols' store and other shops. This site marker was donated anonymously.

The Old Landing Place, now buried beneath Kimball's By the Sea, was once home to blacksmith and boatbuilders' shops.

The Roy Family, current owners of Kimball's donated this station.

Finally, the "New Shipyard" between 1800 and 1866 built and launched Cohasset's largest sailing vessels.

The site later became home to actor Lawrence Barrett and then to financier Clarence Barron.

The marker was donated in Barron's memory.

Patricia Murphy, the Project Chairman explained, historical photographs as well as images from glass slides owned by Mary Fleming, were adapted by local artist Bob Sweeney.

Ripley added, "He absolutely captured exactly what we were looking for. He just did a first class job on it."

Ripley said, "The general theme and idea of The Captains' Walk was copied, in my mind, from the Freedom Trail in Boston.

"It's a self-conducted tour that you can take at your own pace," he added. "It tells you about as much as you'd want to know, without boring you with a lot of written material."

Members of the commission agreed The Captains' Walk was a community project, as a large number of donations paid for the project, while Highway Dept. workers and even passers-by helped erect the signs.

Murphy said she is glad to see people stopping to read the signs.

"The harbor is a place that so many people come to from so many places," she added, "and I guess what we wanted to do was just to tell them that it's been special for a long time."

Wadsworth agreed.

"It's important," he said, "that we keep the last traces of the old harbor from being lost or covered up or torn down."

Playhouse Associates award grants

The South Shore Playhouse Associates, Inc., of Cohasset, has awarded grants totaling $135,400 to various non-profit South Shore organizations.

A total of twenty-seven theatrical, artistic, educational, recreational and community service organizations based in seven South Shore communities were beneficiaries of the gifts.

Two of the awards were challenge grants to be matched by the recipients for major building programs. They are the South Shore Art Center of Cohasset, originally a satellite operation of the Playhouse Associates, and the Cohasset Community Center.

Other grant recipients include The South Shore Conservatory of Music, Cohasset Youth Athletic Association, Cohasset Boosters Club, Hingham Civic Orchestra, Hingham Civic Music Theatre, Young People's Summer Theatre of Scituate, Social Service League of Cohasset, Cohasset Dramatic Club, Old Colony Council Boy Scouts and the Cohasset Sailing Club.

Also the Cohasset Rotary Club Scholarship Fund, Fine Arts Chorale of Weymouth, Sandy Beach Association, Cohasset Historical Society, Cohasset Parent School Association, American Field Service, Cohasset Swim and Recreation Trust, Scituate Arts Association, Cohasset Gridiron Club, Hull Life Saving Museum, Prelude Concert Series, South Shore Natural Science Center, New England Wildlife Center, The Talking Information Center of Marshfield, and the South Shore Men of Harmony-Scituate Chapter.

Chiropractic for HEALTH

by Dr. Kevin M. Neill, Chiropractic Physician

A STIFF NECK

A patient who has a stiff neck also may experience pain and muscle spasm. An aching, tired neck, headache and referred pain to the face, shoulder, arm or hand are other symptoms that may be experienced. The stiffness may be caused by poor posture, muscle fatigue, tension from physical or emotional stress, or long hours in one position. Stiffness can come on suddenly or the patient may accumulate fatigue and stress over a period of years. Left untreated, stiffness can reuslt in muscle tension headaches and eventually may lead to osteoarthritis, which is the breakdown of cartilege inside the joints. Through adjustments, chiropractic goals are to relieve pain, improve the neck's range of motion and to restore the alignment of the neck.

The science of chiropractic goes to the source of the problem rather than merely dealing with symptoms. Thus the source of your discomfort, whether existing today or merely in the developing stages, can be addressed, and your health goals and happiness can be enhanced. Periodic exams will serve to address your present discomforts as well as providing assistance and guidance so that tomorrow can be as happy and comfortable as today. around town

☐ Lots of potential basketball stars will be seen around Cohasset this week . . . there is a clinic being run by Bill Fallon and his able crew up at the high school, and it is always a successful one!

☐ Here's to a speedy recovery for Betty Poland, who is a patient at the Phillips House, Mass General Hospital, and to Libby Thiessen, who is also a patient there. Get well quickly, gals!

☐ Mark Murphy finished his year at the Dynami program in grand style! At the completion exercise he was awarded the outstanding intern of the year award, named the Paul S. Reville Award. Mark is still a busy guy, now he is off to Johnston State College in Vermont for the summer program that is underway there.

☐ The town of Cohasset is having a "baby boom" of its own lately...hearty congratulations to Joseph and Mary Connolly, who had a son on May 9, born at South Shore Hospital. His name is Stephen Joseph Connolly, and he has an added bonus...his grandparents live in Cohasset. They are Mr. and Mrs. John Coe of Pond Street, and here's betting that they are all set to spoil little Stephen just as much as Mom and Dad will allow!

☐ There were two babies born at South Shore Hospital on May 25. Jay and Jody Caron are the delighted parents of a baby girl, and David and Mary Londergan had a son (can't you just see David's mom, also named Mary, pushing the baby carriage now ...she'll be one of the happiest walkers that we will see this summer!).

☐ Next week there are a few birthdays that we must take note of, though we will not mention ages! Happy birthday to Anita and Kim!

☐ Patrick Suhrbier, son of John and Robin Suhrbier, is making his debut in the tennis circuit this summer, next week to be exact. He will be playing in his first tennis tournament at the Falmouth Tennis Club, in the twelve year old division, on July 7. Let us know how you do Patrick, and good luck in your efforts!

☐ Never would have believed the lines for the "Witches of Eastwick" tryouts last Sunday, incredible. In all of the newscasts that we saw, never saw a familiar face...wonder how many out-of-towners they chose for the now-famous "Cohasset look"?

☐ Be sure to give the kiddos (and yourself too) a real treat this summer by taking them to the Maritime Museum and the Captain John Wilson Historical House (both in the Center of town). They are open from 1:30-4:30 every day but Monday, and admission is the best buy in town at 75 cents for adults and 25 cents for children. There are special guided tours available by calling the Historical Society at 383-0773 or 383-6930.

☐ Caps off (graduation caps that is) to three Cohasset gals who graduated from Providence College last month. Anna S. Abbruzzese, who was awarded a bachelors degree in management; Katherine Cowan, who was awarded a bachelors degree in marketing; and, Karen Murphy, who was awarded a bachelors degree in social work. Best of luck in your future endeavors girls.

☐ It was a perfect weekend for the Arts Festival, and it certainly seemed to be successful, if the crowds were any judge. All of the efforts of the Art Center should give themselves a pat on the back for their hard work "pulling everything together," as it really paid off.

She'll be back

She came back to town late last week. Without any fanfare and little notice, Mary Jane McArthur dropped off her letter of resignation to the board of selectmen.

She returned to her summer home in Maine where she'll remain until the fall. Except for periodic trips back home, Mary Jane will stay away from the anticipated activity that promises to fill Cohasset's summer.

To say Mary Jane is committed to this town is an understatement. She is devoted. No matter how she voted on issues, or who she opposed, Mary Jane always had the town at heart.

In an interview two years ago, Mary Jane admitted she was a volunteer 'junkie.' Whether it was the historical society, the PTO, or a municipal committee, Mary Jane served.

Recalling the interview, Mary Jane admitted how she felt strongly motivated to serve others. "I could never sit at home and do nothing," she said. When her children were older, she decided it was time to get back to fulltime work, and take up the various causes and concerns of her town.

When Mary Jane first stepped onto the board of selectmen, some thought her to be cold and unapproachable. That could not be further from the truth.

Mary Jane is a trusted and beloved member of the faculty at the Hatherly School in Scituate. Her daughter's early difficulties in school led Mary Jane to study special education. For many years, she has helped countless children in the Scituate school system. She is known as a warm, caring, intelligent and valuable member of that school's staff.

Her later years on the board proved to some that Mary Jane was indeed a feeling, caring individual. Her banter and semi-serious arguments with selectman Laugelle were an expected part of the meeting's agenda.

She never brushed a citizen's concerns aside. As members of the press, we'd anticipate Mary Jane's frustrations with continual dog hearings, spiraling costs of the town's sewer plan, and complaints about harbor moorings.

She was knowledgeable about the town's sewer problems, and the need for watershed protection. Her 'pet' cause for the last few years has been to build a new town hall or an addition to the present facility. She worked hard to provide adequate space for town office employees under one municipal roof.

Mary Jane was there through the days of Fire Chief Dooley, Arthur Clark, Mark Lanza, and John DeBassio. She'll be around for many more.

We hope Mary Jane has a restful summer. Because by fall, we suspect she'll be right back in the thick of things.

Some feel the Red Sox are a sure thing this October. We put our money on Mary Jane.

Drive carefully.

The Dragon goes 'bewitching'

By Claire McDonough
Mariner Correspondent

The Dragon looked up from his newspaper.

"How do you grow warts?" he asked.

I was startled. "You've got me there. I've sent kids to the doctor to have warts removed, but for some reason the question of how to grow them just never arose. Hard though that may be to believe."

He read in silence for a while and finally I weakened.

"Why do you want to grow warts? I asked.

The Dragon sighed. "You just don't keep up with current events, do you? Warner Brothers is filming "The Witches of Eastwick" right here on the South Shore. They're going to be doing some pretty heavy casting among the local residents, and the way I see it, this is my big chance."

"You still haven't explained the warts." I reminded him.

"I didn't think I'd have to. I thought everybody knows that witches have warts. And men can be witches, too. The word 'witch' originally came from 'wicca' which means 'wise'. The way I see it, there's room in that picture for a very wise man who is generally conceded to be bewitching."

"Let me try to break this to you gently. There is, indeed, such a role. And Jack Nicholson has it.

The Dragon gave me a scathing look. "How many warts does he have?"

"I don't think he has any, " I admitted. "But on the other hand, neither did Kim Novak in 'Bell, Book, and Candle.'

"And Joan of Arc was burned as a witch, and I never heard that she had warts."

The Dragon considered. "That may be why she was later vindicated. And anyway, the English never did understand these things. And that nice lady who does the Maxwell House coffee commericals certainly had plenty of warts when she was the Wicked Witch of the West in the "Wizard of Oz."

"Nevertheless," I persisted stubbornly, "I still think the wart part may be a falacy. I know lots of people with warts, and they're not witches. And some of the witches I know of aren't particularly wicked, either."

The Dragon considered for a minute. "You could be right," he conceded, "but Hollywood will probably go for the fallacy. And I still think I can out-wart Jack Nicholson. The wickedest thing he ever did was to cheer for the L.A. Lakers."

"Okay," I told him. "But if you ask me, there's something incongruous about someone called the Dragon thinking he has to grow warts to appear wicked."

"I hate to admit it," he said, "but you could be right again. History is filled with stories of incredibly wicked people who lured others to destruction because of their fatal beauty. Maybe I won't need any makeup at all. Warner Brothers is really in luck."

He returned to his Mariner and read while I considered whether or not I could adjust to life as the wife of a sex symbol. Just as I was considering asking Joanne Woodward for advice, the Dragon snorted.

"Unpack," he told me. "We won't be going to Hollywood after all."

"You mean," I asked, "because they're shooting the movie in Hingham, Cohasset and Scituate?"

"No," he said sadly. I had figured we'd do one movie here, then it's off to the bright lights and glitter."

"And you changed your minds?"

He nodded slowly. "It says here that they're looking for 'real' people. You'll be turned down if you're too beautiful or handsome."

"You mean I get to keep you all to myself?"

He smiled bewitchingly.

Holding a special election is proper

Letters

To the Editor:

The people of the Town of Cohasset deserve full representation on the Board of Selectmen.

The Town has voted to have five Selectmen sit on the Board, not four, and is best served when that wish is respected by filling any vacancy as soon as possible.

As Chairman of the Town Government Structure Committee, I recognize the need for this special election, which I would support even though I have been, and will be, a candidate for Selectman.

The cost of a Special Election—about $3,500—is negligible compared to the dollar amounts, in the hundreds of thousands or more, that the Selectmen will have to make decisions about in the coming year.

If we do not have a special election soon, the town will have an even number of Selectmen for ten months—almost a year—to make decisions which could be stymied or delayed because of tie votes. A workable structure of government for our highest elected board, the Selectmen, requires that there be an odd number on the Board of Selectmen.

Having a special election is the right thing to do. I ask every resident of the town for their support for the holding of that election.

Sincerely,
John K. McNabb, Jr.
53 Pond Street

It is time to present a unified front

To the Editor:

We recently concluded another Cohasset Special Town Meeting. Once again it was voted to "get on" with implementation of what Dick Avery so aptly pointed out is no longer the Ward Plan, but Cohasset's Waste Water Plan.

As a former Advisory Committee and Citizens Sewer Advisory Committee member I feel it is important to make several comments about what may be the reasons for the delay in implementing the Cohasset Plan, as well as the State's apparent reluctance to provide timely funding for the project.

Cohasset, at open and public forums, has evaluated the merits of a large plant versus a moderate sized waste water plan. We have voted four times to proceed with a plan that we can support financially. Yet, progress to implement the vote has met with one road block after another. Why?

I, for one, was surprised to hear on town meeting floor that a number of residents, who oppose the voted Cohasset Plan, have been meeting with state officials and calling the Hull Sewer Commissioners. To my knowledge these residents have no official status to conduct such meetings, and it may be that through such activities we, as a town, appear to be sending conflicting messages to those state and local representatives with whom we must work in getting our sewer plan installed.

Obtaining state funding for our project is always difficult under the best of circumstances because of the complex engineering and financing requirements which have to be negotiated. The process becomes more difficult when a "Group" decides to circumvent the town vote because they think they know what's best for us. Such activities can, perhaps, explain why Cohasset has had such difficulty in obtaining the necessary funding to get the job done.

I have always felt that out town form of government works well. This is the arena in which different points-of-view should be resolved. It is now time for us all to begin to present a united front to both the state and other officials and show them that we support the many votes we have taken to move ahead with the Cohasset Waste Water Plan.

Casting Co. requests more photographs

To the Editor:

We would like to take this opportunity to thank the people of the South Shore for their overwhelming response to our casting call for "The Witches of Eastwick."

The approximately 1,000 people that we saw were wonderful, however, because of the great response we were unable to see what we are sure were other wonderful faces. Therefore we welcome your pictures and personal data mailed to: The Casting Company, 132 Brookline Avenue, Boston, Mass. 02215, to add to our list of possible candidates for this film.

Once again we would like to thank all the people of the South Shore for their enthusiasm and cooperation.

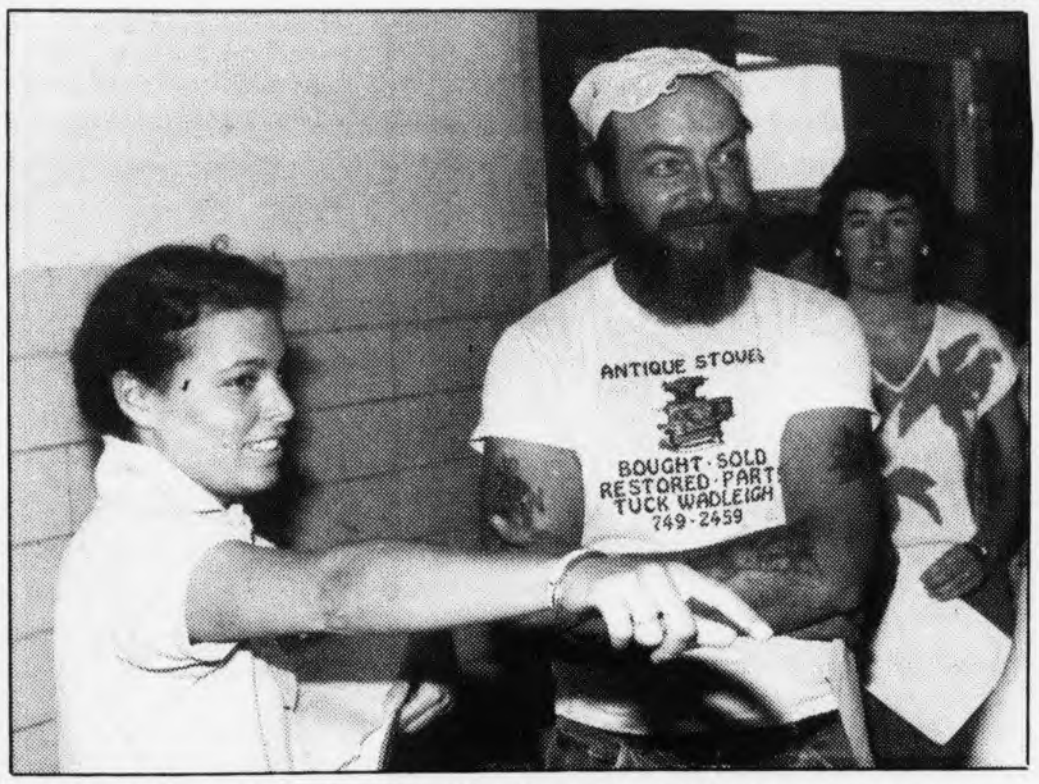
Ryan Joyce (above) of Weymouth has it made as he sits comfortably among the adults awaiting an audition.

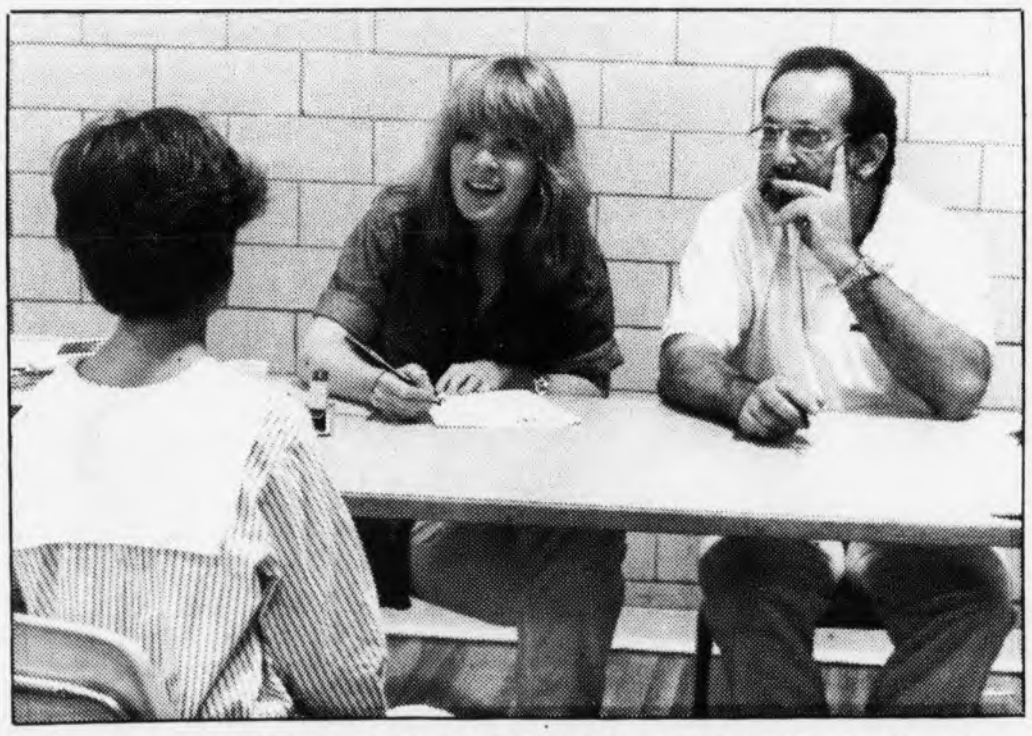
An estimated 4-6,000 came to the Deer Hill School from all over to grab for that shot at stardom.

Stephanie Schuyler, and Betty and Joe Mazza of Cohasset managed some semblence of humor as they stand in the sun, waiting for a minute-long audition.



Lisa Niden of the Casting Co. directs aspiring Thesbian Tuck Wadleigh of Hingham into the room where he will be auditioned.

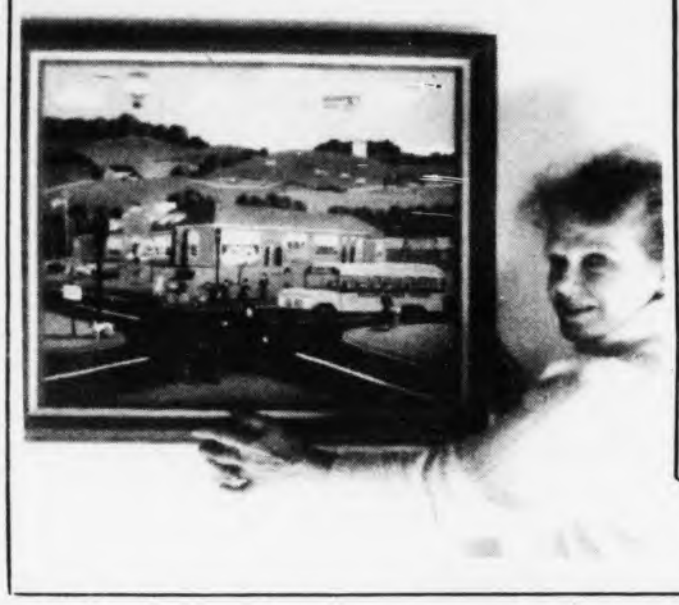
When finally inside (in the shade), there was more waiting for Irene Lord and Quinton Lane as they fill out their applications.



There were 20-30 seconds to make a lasting impression on Carol Larkin and Herb Mandell of The Casting Co.

Terry and Scott Young came from Weymouth to Sohier Street to seek fame and fortune. What did they get? "...will call you."

Group appreciates Osgood gift



Artist B. Spencer Green displays the primitive she painted of the Osgood School.

Letters

(This letter was written to artist B. Spencer Green from the advisors to the Osgood School creative works book. Ed.)

Dear Mrs. Green:

It has recently come to our attention that you have made a generous contribution of your painting to the Joseph Osgood School, and all the children that will pass through its doors.

The primitive that you allowed us to use for the cover, of the first literary magazine published in the school, was a wonderful gift. The cover has received rave reviews from the children, the faculty, and the parents of the school.

To have now donated the original work to the school is a gift that will long be appreciated. To have such a special and personal work in our school is indeed a treasure, something to be enjoyed by all who enter the building, as well as an educational tool for the children within. For yours is a style of painting that encompasses the very beginning of our American heritage.

We are so pleased that you presented such a fine piece of work to our school. It is a pleasure to know you and to view your work. We again thank you for all you did on behalf of the school this past year.

Teens dismayed with auditions

Letters

(This letter was sent to the assistant casting director at the Casting Company. Ed.)

Dear Ms. Larkin:

We the undersigned citizens of Cohasset, would like to express our concern about the fairness of the selection process which you used this morning.

Many teenagers, including us, waited patiently in line for four hours in hope of having the opportunity to be interviewed for your movie "The Witches of Eastwick." It was our understanding that you would continue to interview until 1 p.m. and that you would then make your selection based on merit rather than on a first come, first chosen basis. At 12:15 p.m., we were turned away by one of your representatives who said "We already have 300 extras under the age of 20 . . . it would be a waste of time to stay any longer." We believe that the handling of this situation was not appropriate or consistent with your representations.

We are sure that you didn't plan to handle your interviews in this fashion. Clearly it is not in your best interest from a public relations perspective. We encourage you to be more sensitive in the future.

Yours truly,

Susannah Lean

Existing sewer plant not an option

To the Editor:

At selectmen's meeting June 16, Mr. Charles DeSantis demonstrated one of the reasons why an objective independent reappraisal of our sewer options is essential. He claimed that, should the Hull connection fall through, the fall back position is to enlarge the existing plant and that it would not require an ocean outfall. When challenged aggressively by a selectman, he changed the story to admit that an ocean outfall might be necessary, but that the sewer commission preferred to do without it.

Surely the Town has had enough of the strategy of saying anything, promising anything, to suit the occasion, expecting to blame it on DEQE or EPA when the statement proves false. The other two commissioners don't seem to have independent thoughts, are not an effective moderating influence, and are content to be echoes.

The existing plant is a non-solution not only because of the need for an ocean outfall, but because it can't be expanded to provide the capacity the town really needs. Mr. DeSantis' promise is based on the delusion that somehow the sewered area could be further reduced.

The objective of a sewer plan ought to be to provide a long term solution to our health and sewer problems, not to come up with another too-cheap mickey mouse scheme that soon will have to be redone - and redone totally without funding.

Our options should be realistically revealed by an independent and objective reappraisal. Perhaps it can be done by a review committee composed of representatives from Board of Health, Board of Selectmen, Water Commission etc. But certainly not by the Old Sewer Advisory Board. It's objective was not solution of health problems, but rather to prevent growth through inadequate sewer service.

Automated library leads to personalized service network of libraries on the South Shore. The network, Hayes explained, will be supported through federal and state grants. "The state's primary objective," he said, "is to increase the ability of libraries to share materials. Equal access to library materials is a serious concern. There is a bill in the legislature, sponsored by Sen. William Bulger, for aide to libraries. It includes a provision for the state to pay the costs of the telephone lines between libraries linked in a computer network.

"This is a unique way for the state to promote equal access," Hayes said.

The director explained throughout the state there is great disparity between the libraries of various communities. Depending on the ability of the community to pay for those services and the interest of the town, one library may be far inferior to another.

In the Old Colony Network, Hayes said, each town will have full control over its library, materials, staff and budget. Each municipality will have one voting member on the network board which will establish policies. The network has already adopted a formula to determine the town's share of the operating costs. The number of terminals in each library is based on the size of the library's activity.

"There's been no figure established," Hayes said, "but Cohasset's share of the total operating costs will be 4.5 percent. We are talking about a very sophisticated computer system that never would have been affordable by ourselves."

The central computer to be located at Massasoit Community College in Brockton, the software and local terminals will be assisted through the financial support of a $400,000 federal grant and $100,000 in state aide. Each member library will pay for its own terminals and computer equipment.

Cohasset is scheduled to have eight terminals in the library; two for staff use when checking out materials, and six for public access to the union catalogue. That is the central information center where the list of all books owned by the 21 member towns are on file.

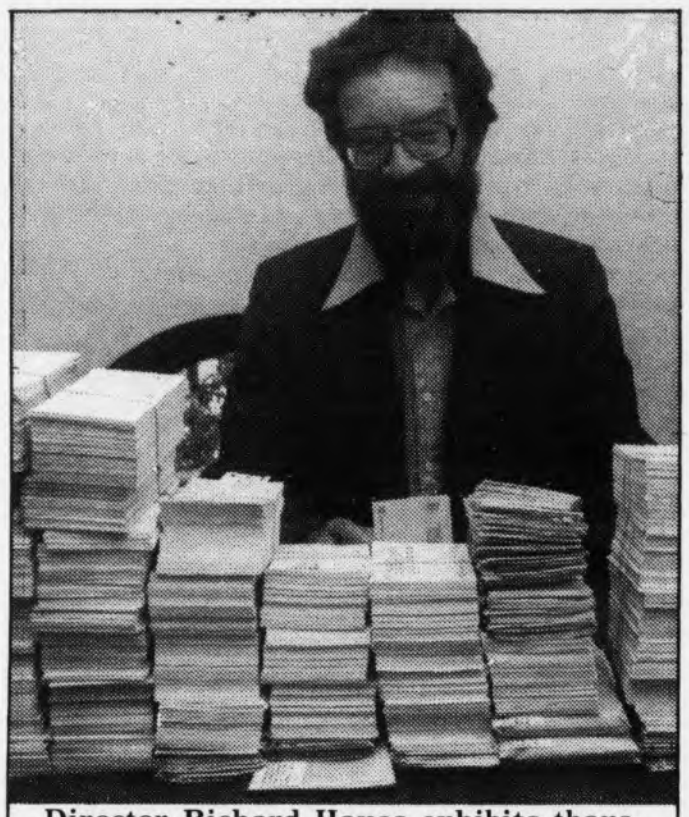
"Our immediate task," according to the director, "is to convert all the cards in our card catalogue and patron registration files to the computer. That will take us about a year. Speaking enthusiastically, I see some real benefits at the end of our labor. All the manual and paper activities will now be computerized."

Among the towns joining Cohasset in the Old Colony are: Milton, Walpole, Scituate, Norwell, Hanover, Marshfield, Duxbury, Weymouth, Braintree, Quincy, Randolph, Holbrook, Abington, Canton, Stoughton, Sharon, and Plymouth.

Hayes has investigated and studied library computer systems for the past seven years, as chairman of the Eastern Regional Library Systems Automation Committee. Although knowledgeable about the types of systems available, Hayes said he is not as aware of the technical aspects of computers.

He is enthusiastic about the Pratt library's introduction to the expanding world of automation.

"This system will help us increase the range and variety of our collection," he explained, "and reduce unnecessary duplication. Now we have to guess that a certain book may not be popular, and we will purchase a limited amount. The computer will let us know if another library has the book. Then we might decide to borrow that title, not purchase it. I even see that down the road, the network libraries will make cooperative purchases."



Director Richard Hayes exhibits thousands of catalog cards, a fraction of the 30,000 cards a year library staff must now proofread, sort, file or remove from files.

Hayes, who was part of the team that selected the Old Colony computer system, said the union catalogue will contain about a half million titles, and about a million volumes. Cohasset currently owns 40,000 titles. "The increase in the number of available books is tenfold," he said.

Another benefit of the system, Hayes noted, will be the easy access to books. If the book is available at another member library, it can be delivered to Cohasset the next day. "The regional system will support that transportation system," he said.

Annual town meeting in 1984 appropriated $25,000 for "start-up" costs of the network system. None of that money has yet to be expended, Hayes said. "It took us a year to evaluate the proposals, so there really haven't been any start-up costs yet," he noted.

The director explained there were ten bids submitted to the evaluation team. The top three bidders were carefully screened by the team members in a two-day process. After six months of negotiations, a contract was signed with the Sperry Corp. of New York and Boston. Cohasset participated in the contract signing last month.

In the 1986 annual town meeting, voters again appropriated $25,000 for the completion of Cohasset's start-up costs, including the extra staff needed for the data conversion.

"Now that we have a contract, we will place an order for the computers. The next six months will be spent with the data conversion," Hayes stated. In the six months after that, software will be installed in the central computer in Brockton. The network will have a 60-day acceptance test on the system. "If the system passes," Hayes explained, "then we will pay and begin using the system."

The director predicted it would be a year before the system is operational.

"Traditionally, libraries have been very conservative. We were one of the last businesses to have typewriters. But this small library checks in and out about 100,000 pieces of materials a year. With that number of transactions, we should have been automated by now. Libraries are oriented to delivering services, but we are not staffed with people who are in research and development. So we wait until something has been demonstrated effective."

And being experienced in municipal management, Hayes explained all requests for funding must be thoroughly documented.

"But we were very pleased," he said, "that all 21 libraries in the network were funded by their city or town the first time around. There is tremendous support for automation of services in communities. The idea is supported by finance committees here and throughout the network."

The network system will not reduce the number of staff members at the Pratt library. "The computers will improve staff productivity, by keeping up with the demand for services and maybe by increasing our services, such as more open hours," he added.

Computers will now help a patron locate a book and check out that volume. The terminal will immediately relay information regarding the current status of the book and where it is located.

There are disadvantages to the use of computers in the library, Hayes admitted. "The cost of the network is great, and it's taken a long time planning this cooperative venture. I have another concern that the library may become dependent on a machine that is not totally under our control. If something happens, each library is dependent on it. I would prefer full local control, but we have to put some trust in that central computer."

One benefit of the Sperry system, he said, would be if the telephone lines were down between Cohasset and the central computer in Brockton. "Then we can operate our terminals individually. We would only lose our connection to the union catalogue," he said.

The Sperry system, with use of the UNIX operating system, is "a very powerful multi-user, multi-task operational system. It's very attractive, what we call user-friendly. It will be easy for the staff and the public to use the terminals and to use different functions," Hayes said.

The director explained that by use of a key word, the search mechanism in the computer will seek out any book the patron is attempting to locate. "It's a great improvement over the card catalogue," he noted.

The on-going operational costs of the system will be about $10,000 each year for Cohasset. Although with improved overdue notice systems and a likelihood of increased collection of overdue fines, that cost may be reduced in the future.

The card catalogue will be but a memory with this new computerized system, Hayes said. Instead of processing and proofreading 15,000 cards a year, the librarian and his staff "can find better things to do with our time. Simply, the town can't afford to pay staff members to file that many cards. Those activities are no longer acceptable," he added.

"This is just the beginning of a new era in library services," he predicted. "There is a great benefit here in our increased ability to analyze library activity because the system can produce a number of reporting activities. These reports will show how the library is used and what types of services are in demand. It will give us a greater ability to develop our resources and plan those resources in a better way."

REAL ESTATE GUIDELINES

By Norma Telesco
Home Center Realty

LOCATION

The old Realtors' adage, "location, location, location," reflects the fact that location is one of the most important considerations in determining the price of a home.

The neighborhood in which a house is located is a major factor, but not the only. For instance, if a house is on a busy street, it may not appeal to buyers concerned about children or pets playing in traffic. If it's in an area that is not convenient to the major business district, or if there's no public transportation into town, some people might rule it out on that basis. While a nearby school may be an attractive feature to families with children, having a school directly across the street may not seem so desirable. It's important to remember, however, that you can get more house for the money if you're not bothered by location factors that could cause others to rule out the property.

Cohasset well represented in tennis tournament action

By Lisa Shumaker
Mariner Correspondent

Sure, you've heard of Chris Evert Lloyd and Martina Navratilova. Well now you can add two more names to your list of great women tennis players because Sue Dalrymple and Linda O'Laughlin have shown they can play with the best.

These two local players competed in the pre-qualifying round for the notorious Virgina Slims Tennis Tournament held in Newport, Rhode Island at the Tennis Hall of Fame.

In this preliminary round, professional women tennis players from all over New England battled it out to see which one would come out on top and be privileged enough to participate in the actual tournament itself.

Out of a talented field of 16 players only one would be able to go on. Despite these temendous odds, both Sue and Linda went into the tournament with positive attitudes.

Sue, who is now twenty-one, started playing tennis nine years ago and went on to play first singles on her high school team as well as participating in college competition. The Slims was the first professional tournament Sue had ever entered and although she lost to the first seeded player in the opening round, Sue hung in tough and turned in a tremendous effort.

In fact, Sue was so encouraged by the way she played in this tournament, she plans to enter as many tournaments as she can this summer and fall.

At 18 years old, Linda has been playing for 10 years. Her experience has included playing for Cohasset High School and participating in several junior tennis tournaments. In her first professional tournament, Linda played against Eileen Daniels who is the number one women's tennis player in New England. After a tough but exciting match, Linda was quick to say she would participate again if given the chance.

Linda O'Laughlin

Both Sue and Linda mentioned they found it difficult to play on the grass surface. After playing on clay for so many years, they felt that playing on the grass made the game totally different. However, both Sue and Linda enjoyed having ball boys and ball girls do all the fetching for them. Sue called this service a "luxury", while Linda had some trouble getting used to the fact that she did not have to go running after stray balls. (I'm sure she would love to get used to this!).

The preparation for this tournament started back in March when the girls were notified about the event and were sent application forms to fill out. In her preparation, Sue stressed physical fitness but put more emphasis on playing matches. Sue feels the best training for a tournament of this kind is to play up to four matches per week. Sue believes that in order to play with such talented competition it is imperative that one make a strong commitment to playing as much tennis as possible under game conditions.

Linda, on the other hand, in her preparation for the match stressed the mental part of the game. Linda worked on making herself mentally tough for the match as well as strategically smart. Linda constantly thought up plans of attack in every possible situation. She felt the strategic portion of the game played just as important a role in tennis at this level.

Both Sue and Linda were enthusiastic about their experiences in Newport. Not only did they learn alot, but they had a great time as well. As Linda put it, "It was great to be in the same lockerroom that Chris Evert Lloyd was once in."

Don't worry Linda, I'm sure someday Chrissy will be honored to have been in the same lockerroom that Sue Dalrymple and Linda O'Loughlin once used.

Despite loss, Cohasset outplays Douglas

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

Cohasset's champions of the Coastal Youth-Soccer League met their matches last weekend at the state tournament at Amherst.

The 19-and-under squad coached by Larry Shultz finished its season 8-1-1, with a 2-1 overtime loss to Marblehead.

"They scored in the last three minutes of overtime," Shultz said, "It was a perfect play; it came across and the kid put it in. Nobody had a chance. It was just a well-played game.

Cohasset's squad had its chances the coach recalled.

"About two minutes before that," he said, "we had a corner kick that went through three or four people right in front of the net. It was an open net, but it just eluded everyone."

Cohasset scored the first goal of the game midway through the first period as Bobby Shultz passed the ball across to his brother David, who "one-touched it directly into the net

"It was a gorgeous goal," said the proud coach and father.

He added, "John Reidy played a super game and Curt Weisenfluh also played an outstanding game at fullback."

Shultz acknowledged Marblehead was a very good team.

"They won in the semi-finals on Saturday, 3-2," he noted, "advancing to the finals."

He concluded, "The kids played the way they've played all year. It was a super game; we just came up one goal short."

Shultz' son Bobby coached Cohasset's 16-and-under squad to a semi-final victory, before it was eliminated from the tournament by Douglas, 1-0.

Cohasset beat Framingham 4-1 Saturday behind the brilliant play of Ian Smart, who led the team with three goals and one assist.

Jason Marsac added the other goal.

"We played very well in that game," Shultz said. "Everyone did an excellent job."

He also cited the "stellar play" of Steven Meyers and Peter Buckley.

In their last game of the year, Cohasset saw Douglas score seven minutes into the game; the first and final goal.

"I think we totally out-played them offensively," Shultz said. "The ball was down on their end of the field most of the game, but we couldn't score.

"It was one of those games where we did everything but score."

More transit service okayed for area

The MBTA board of directors has approved service agreements with eight private bus carriers and two commuter boat operators for continuation of additional transit services between the South Shore and Boston.

The board voted to approve the extension of the interagency agreement with the Department of Public Works which provides for those services from July 1, 1986 through June 30, 1987, using state transportation bond funding.

"By extending commuter boat and bus services, South Shore residents will continue to be provided with quality transit alternatives to driving," General Manager James F. O'Leary said. "This agreement is extremely important in light of increasing traffic congestion in the Greater Boston area."

The $1.99 million budget for the one-year continuation allows for service agreements to serve the following South Shore communities: Whitman, Weymouth, Scituate Pembroke, Plymouth, Kingston, Bridgewater, Middleboro, Canton, Hull, Hingham, Marshfield, Quincy, Braintree, New Bedford, Taunton and Fall River.

Services are presently contracted with private bus carriers American Eagle (approximate annual cost: $32,688); Bloom Bus Lines ($35,840); Bonanza Bus Lines ($51,200); Canton and Blue Hill Bus Lines ($72,000); Interstate Coach ($38,400); Plymouth and Brockton Street Railway ($215,000); Carey Motor Transportation ($208,800), and Sea Shore Transportation ($24,000), and commuter boat operators Mass. Bay Lines and Boston Harbor Commuter Services (combined annual cost: $1.3 million.)

The original agreement in March of 1984 between the MBTA and the DPW established a comprehensive set of actions to provide alternate services during the reconstruction of the Southeast Expressway.

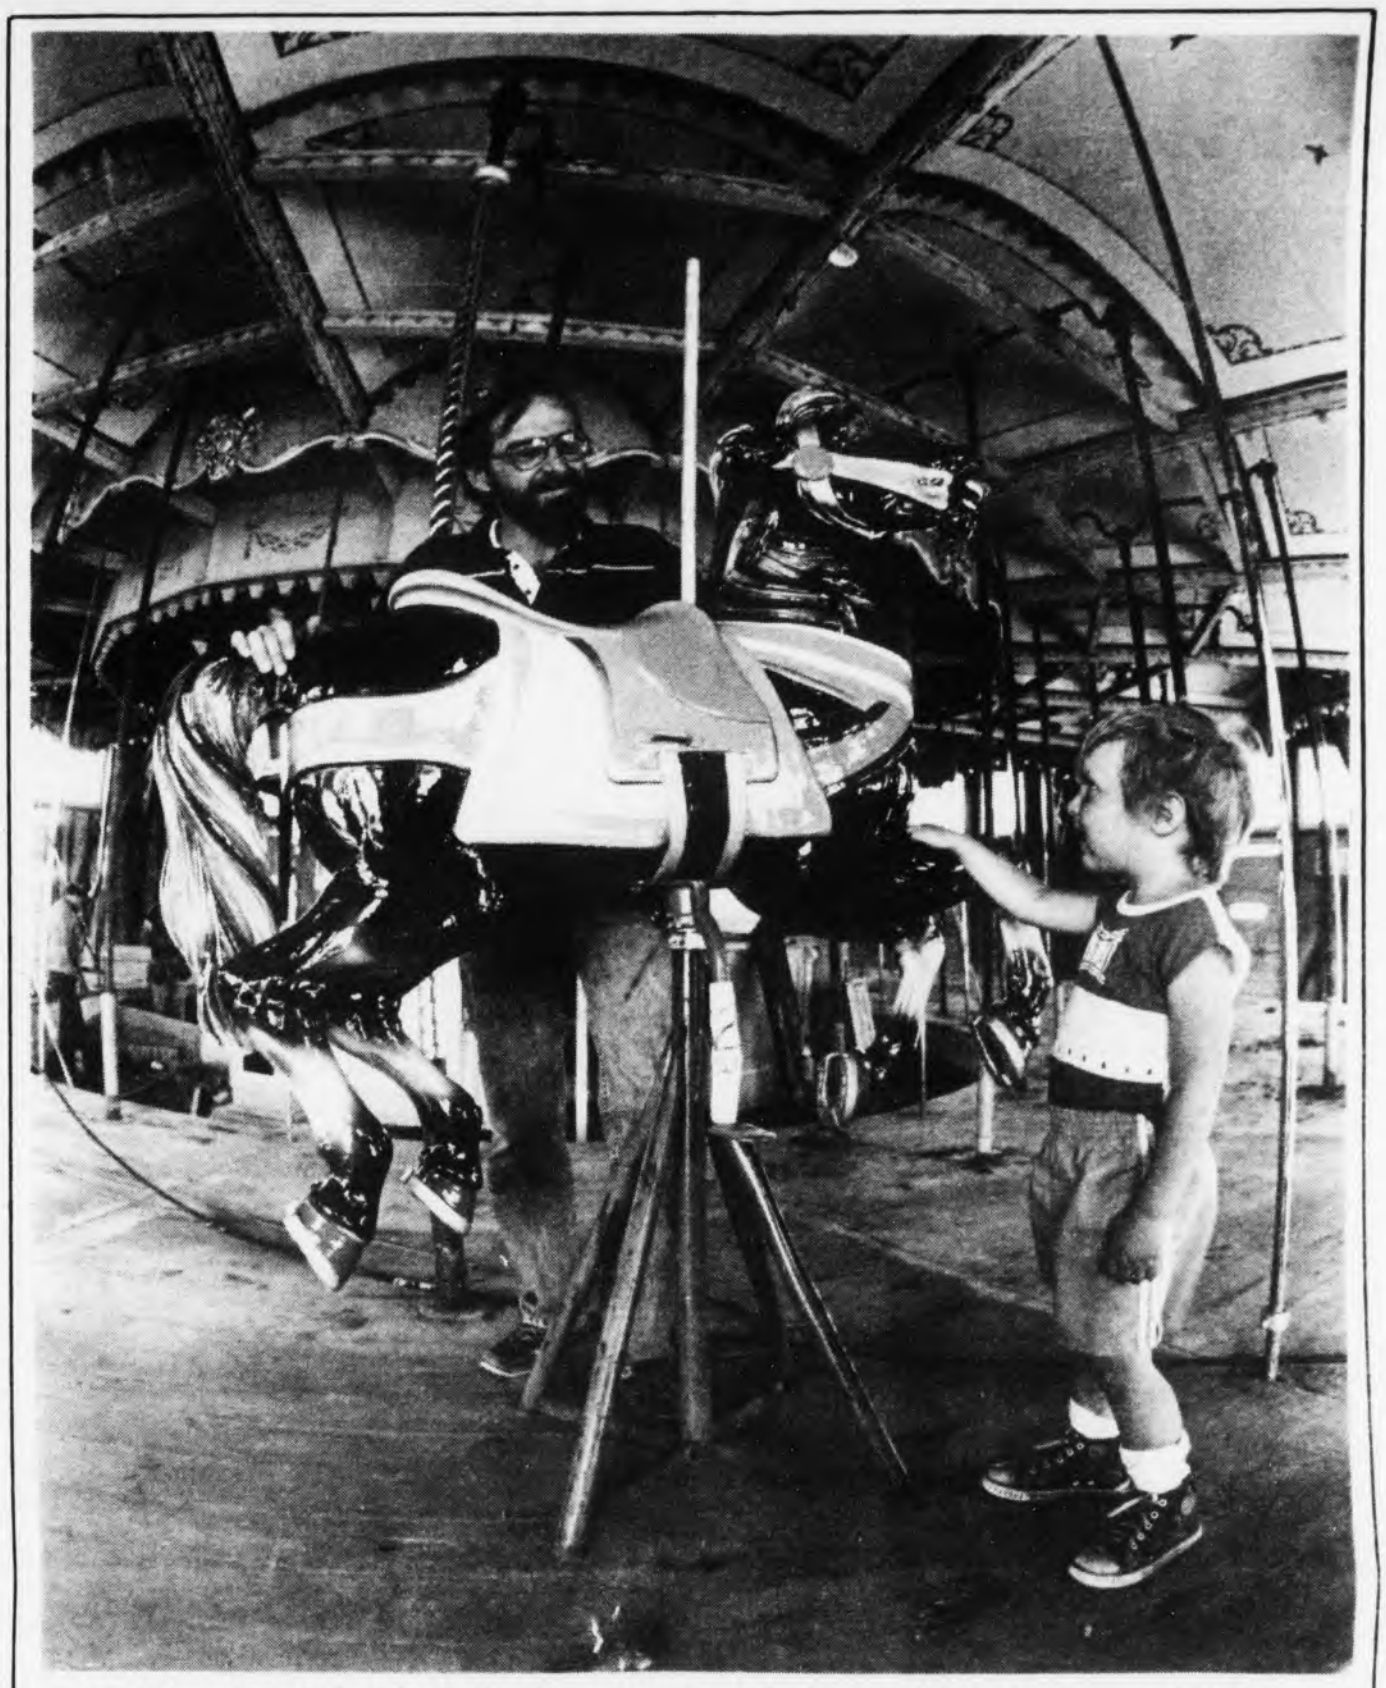
The Massachusetts Legislature, recognizing the value of additional transit alternatives, included funding for this service in the recent transportation bond bill.

Democratic candidate on cable

Cable television subscribers in Cohasset, Hingham, Hull, Hanover, Norwell, Scituate and Marshfield will have an opportunity to hear the Democratic candidates for the offices of Lieutenant Governor and Attorney General discussing a wide range of issues.

Co-Op Six, a regional coalition of South Shore Democratic Town Committees, has produced a question-and-answer session which will enable voters to evaluate the candidacies of Evelyn Murphy and Gerard D'Amico who are running for the office of Lieutenant Governor as well as Joanne Shotwell and James Shannon who are campaigning for Attorney General.

American Cablesystems will air the Lieutenant Governor candidates' forum July 14 at 7 p.m. on the Regional Channel; the Attorney General candidates can be heard on July 21 also at 7 p.m.



An elaborately painted wooden horse prepares for its new life in the Carousel Under The Clock at MetroPark's Nantasket Beach in Hull. Looking on are Daniel Prigmore, one of the three Hull investors who purchased the antique Paragon Park carousel for a record-breaking $598,800, and three year old Ryan Londergan, of Hull, Ma. Sixty-six children will make the inaugural ride of The Carousel Under The Clock July 1.

Cohasset welcomes sister city

residents to participate in the exchange program.

Committee member Judy Keim said, "The reception has been very good. The thing that is so good is that they (the Prudhommes and the Dines) are nice people."

The mayor's granddaughter, Diane Prudhomme, 13, will be the first French girl to participate in the exchange program. She is staying for the month of July with Jennifer O'Leary, 13.

Judy Keim of the cultural exchange committee said she hopes a group of about 16 adults from Cohasset will stay with families in Souppes-sur-Loring in September.

Violette Prudhomme said the people she has met during her stay here are "very pleasant. I communicate much better than I feared."

She said Cohasset "seems like a large park with houses planted in it like mushrooms. It is pretty and perhaps it is also a sign of trust," she said.

She said in France, most houses are surrounded by a wall and there is less open space.

"I was enchanted to discover this little town by the sea," she said.

France Dine thinks Cohasset residents are "adorable and charming. I say that in all sincerity. It's not to please you," she said.

She had been to New York and San Francisco, but had not spent time in a small town in the U.S. until her trip to Cohasset. She was surprised by the welcome and the way the trip was organized. "The committee must be commended," she said.

Dine said she and her husband are residents of Souppes-sur-Loing and also of Paris. "I'm more Parisian than Souppe," she said. She lives next to the Eiffel Tower and has noticed fewer American tourists there. She said that is probably because of the lower value of the dollar, recent terrorism, and the French government's statement that U.S. could not fly over France for the bombing of Libya.

Mayor Prudhomme said his town is smaller than Cohasset. It has about 5,000 residents, while Cohasset has 7,220. Some residents commute from his town to Paris, which is about an hour's train ride. Souppes-sur-Loing is 90 km south of Paris. He said the town is in a valley and lies on the river Loing. "It's a pretty town," he said. "A lot of people work in the factories around the town, but some people drive or take the train to Paris," he said.

probably the largest casting call The Casting Company has ever done, although we've worked with Spencer for Hire and The Verdict."

The following day the Massachusetts Film Bureau and Casting Company director Herb Mandell decided to thank the residents of the South Shore for participating in the successful audition session.

"We had no complaints about Sunday," film bureau spokesman Julie Wrinn said Monday. " We knew the whole thing was pretty crazy but everyone was very good-natured about it. "

But some Cohasset residents had a few complaints about Sunday's event.

Five Cohasset teens wrote to Carol Larkin of the Casting Company, complaining that despite their four-hour wait, they were turned away from the audition.

"At 12:15 p.m., we were turned away by one of your representatives who said, "We already have 300 extras under the age of 20... it would be a waste of time to stay any longer.' We believe that the handling of this situation was not appropriate or consitent with your representations," they wrote. The letter was signed by five Cohasset residents.

By 9:10 a.m. Sunday morning, the line of human forms, three or four across, reached from the Deer Hill School, around the parking lot and down to the Music Circus. By that time, the police detail, strengthened from two to five officers, had limited Sohier Street to one-way traffic. People who parked their cars at the Osgood School or at the village, were breathless by the time they reached the end of the waiting line.

Women in dresses and high-heeled shoes were not an uncommon sight. Babies in strollers were wheeled along by young mothers, anxious to get themselves or their youngsters into the movies. By 10:30 or 11:30 a.m., the line of bodies had moved several yards, still hundreds of feet away from the schoolyard.

An exhausted Osborne, inside the cafeteria 'holding tank' said the doors would close at 1 p.m. as announced. When asked if she expected the overwhelming response she commented, "well, I got kind of nervous Saturday when I was listening to the radio and I heard the the guy say, 'remember to get to Cohasset early.' I began to realize this might be a lot bigger than we thought."

Mary Beth McNamara did not have far to travel from her Fair Oaks Lane home to the school. The lucky teenager was in line for just about an hour with her friend, Kate Tolini of Aaron River Road before they walked into the audition room.

Suhrbier, who just began to read the book, was asked what part she would like to play in the film. "A witch, of course," she answered.

"My chances are as good as anyone," Suhrbier said. "There were people there from all over.

"It will be an exciting time for the town. It's unique. It'll be exciting for the kids to see how a film is made."

Fred Koed of Pleasant Street said he and daughter, Ashley, 3, were at the school "pretty early. We had a long wait. And when we got there, all we had to do was to walk in front of of the two casting directors, and say hello. They said thank you and that was it."

His daughter didn't mind the wait which concluded about 11:30 a.m.. "The wait wasn't that bad," he noted. "I talked to a lot of people I knew so it didn't seem that long."

His daughter, however, was not completely cognizant of the situation. "She thought we were standing in line to see a movie," he said. "So when we left she said, 'where's the movie?' I told her we'd see one later on. Actually, I hope more that she's in the movie, rather than me."

Others stayed in line longer and were never auditioned. Some persevered a bit longer and finally got their big chance.

Colleagues will miss Mary Jane McArthur's expertise

"I certainly enjoyed working with Mary Jane," Ainslie said this week, after learning of her resignation. "She was active in various committees and boards. But I knew her best when she was a selectman.

"Mary Jane always had the town at heart," he added. "It will be a loss to the town.

Recalling his retirement from politics three years ago, Ainslie said, "I can sympathize with her. The time you have to devote is getting too much.

"Mary Jane used to go to the selectmen's office just about every afternoon after she finished school. She was always giving her time."

Ainslie recalled the number of years he has known McArthur. "I knew her when I was a selectmen and she was a member of various committees. Of course, I knew her better when she became a selectman. The board will really miss her."

Laugelle and McArthur were the two veterans of the selectmen's board. They frequently cast opposing votes on issues, including the sewer plan, but they remained close friends throughout the five years.

"Oh," Laugelle laughed. "I used to kid her a lot. I can't tell you all the things I did and said to her. She's a doll.

"I'm really going to miss her. The board will get along, but it will be tougher without her. The next member will do a good job, I'm sure — they've all done a good job. And I'll continue to work with whomever the town elects to fill the vacancy.

"But as for Mary Jane," he added, "I just can't say enough about her. She's a great lady."

Special election plans. . .

special election to be scheduled.

"They're talking about ten months," he said Monday night. "That's almost a year, that's a long time to go without the full compliment. Three thousand dollars is not a lot of money. Selectmen consider that a lot of money when there are important issues to be decided.

"I've talked to many people this weekend," McNabb said, acknowledging his candidacy in the event of a special election. "Many people feel a special election is proper."

McNabb said no signatures have yet to be collected. "We were waiting to see if it was needed to be done," he said. "It's a disappointment to see selectmen didn't do it. It is the proper thing to do."

Martha Gjesteby, who also ran in the four-candidate race for selectmen in April, said she will be a candidate if a special election is scheduled.

"But I wouldn't have gone that route (McNabb's support of a special election). By the time they call the special election it will be the fall and the seat will be open in April," she said.

A special election will be costly to the town and to the perspective candidates "for such a short time" until the regular April election, Gjesteby said. "There are still four people on the board. I can see the selectmen's point of view."

"I will consider being a candidate at a special election or the annual election," she added. "I've heard several other people are interested. Some are considering if there is a special election."

Art Center summer workshop in July , August

Specials this summer from the South Shore Art Center are a series of intensive workshops zeroing in on a specific art technique such as working with clay, Oriental brush, printmaking, painting the sand and sea and drawing.

The center at 103 Ripley Road in Cohasset, offers these intensive specials usually a week long in duration to allow students to develop a specific art technique. The intensive workshops run during the months of July and August and advanced registration is required for these as well as all courses on the summer schedule.

In July there is an Oriental Brush Techniques workshop taught by Eleanor Avakian the week beginning July 14, 10 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. She will teach the basic brush techniques that can later be applied to various media. Traditional Sumi-e (ink painting) will be demonstrated on rice paper.

At the end of July Ann Murphy will work with students on how to paint the sand and the sea. Her class will meet three mornings July 28, 30 and Aug. 1 from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. This special workshop is for those who have the basic drawing and painting skills and who would like to focus on painting the water. Oils, acrylic, watercolor or pastels may be used for this workshop.

July 14, Joan Appel will teach a one-day workshop, Print Without a Press, from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. The emphasis for this workshop is on a mixture of highly unusual procedures and how to invent one-of-a-kind art forms to create unique works of art.

Bety Kohlberg will teach a three-day workshop in August on expressive drawing. The class will meet August 18, 20 and 22 from 9:30 a.m. to 3 p.m. This is a good workshop for any student who wants to learn to draw or for a student who wants to go beyond the traditonal methods. Students will "draw with color" and in a variety of media.

Outdoor Drawing and Painting, August 11-15, will be led by Rosalind Farbush and will be an intensive study of form using pencil and paint. Students will explore different techniques of creative texture and various methods of paint handling, color and values. The class will meet from 9:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m.

An intensive outdoor workshop in oils and acrylics for intermediate and advanced students will be taught by Albert Abany August 4-8, from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. This workshop offers students a unique opportunity to rapidly develop landscape compositions based on the selective use of landscape elements and exploration of color options.

For the young artist, the Center offers a number of children's art week in Cohasset, Hingham and Norwell. A recent grant from the Joseph Drown Foundation has allowed the Center to take its young artist classes out to the various communities. "Art and Nature" is the theme for this summer's children's workshops where students will work with drawing, painting and mixed media.

In Norwell, the workshop meets at the Public Library, July 21-25 from 3:30 - 5 p.m. and will be taught by Gil Coyle. And in Hingham, the workshop meets at the Community Center, July 7-11 and August 4-8 from 3:30 - 5 p.m. and will be taught by Susan Rodgerson in July and Nancy Connolly in August. These workshops are for young artists ages seven to eleven.

Syma will come to the Center for a one week, July 7-11, Child's Clay and Sculpture workshop. Designed for ages six to twelve, students will work with clay, cardboard, wood, recycle materials and lots of imagination to create three-dimensional art work.

For further information on these workshops or courses on the summer schedule call the South Shore Art Center, 383-9548.

Arts festival lists award winners

Ronald Wilson's color photograph "Moorings" and Tom Johnson's black and white "Sisters" both won first prizes in the South Shore Arts Festival's juried photography exhibit.

Jurying the exhibit were David Saul, chairman of the visual arts department of the Weston School; Jean Howard, instructor of photography at Wheelock College; and Michael Greco, staff photographer for the Boston Herald.

Braintree Cooperative Bank gave the first prize in color and the South Shore Bank gave the first prize in black and white.

Second prizes were awarded to Bob Weiss for his color piece "Cups and Saucers" given by Braintree Cooperative Bank and to Steven Nelson for his black and white "Meadow, World's End" given by Cohasset Chamber of Commerce.

All the awards were presented to the winners at the Champagne Preview. The juried exhibits of festival present some of the best work being done locally and in the Boston area.

Sanctuary presents Antarctic explorer

In January of 1986, Dr. Gerard A. Bertrand, president of the Mass. Audubon Society, co-led a natural history tour to discover the Antarctica, the last frontier. Antarctica is as fascinating today as it was to early explorers more than 100 years ago, he said. The richness and abundance of marine and coastal life is in vivid contrast to the extremes of the Antarctic environment.

Antarctica, as a continent, is the highest, coldest and windiest place on earth. No continent has so few terrestrial inhabitants, with a total fauna of only two insects and two flowering plants and no land mammals.

It might seem at a glance that the area on the continental fringes is as forbidding as that of the interior, but nothing could be further from the truth.

The Antarctic fringe, one percent free of ice and exposed to access by sea is some of the most highly populated land by marine creatures, such as seals and penguins.

On Thursday, June 26, Dr. Bertrand will examine these contrasts and the great abundance of life in the Antarctic ecosystem, the Antarctic Treaty, and the future of this fantastic wilderness area at the South Shore Sanctuary , 2000 Main St., Marshfield, at 8:30 p.m. A fee of $3 will be charged for members, and $4 for non-members.

More up-coming programs include a bird walk with David Clapp at Third Cliff in Scituate on Friday, June 27 at 8 a.m., and on Tuesday, July 15 at 8 a.m. a piping plover patrol and bird walk will be held on Duxbury Beach. On Wednesday, July 2, and Thursday, July 3, sea vegetables, foraging for food on the shore, will be discussed. This two-part workshop will gather, identify, and discover the many uses of common marine plants.

In addition, there will be children's programs for ages 7 to 10, limit nine. A program about wild wetlands will be held July 9, 10, and 11 from 9 a.m. to noon.

The tidal pool zoo will be held July 30 from 1 to 4 p.m., and August 14 from 11:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m.

Pre-registraiton is necessary for all programs, please call at least four days in advance. All programs meet at South Shore office unless otherwise noted.

Handel carillon program

Daniel K. Kehoe, Carillonneur of Trinity College, will perform on the 51-bell Jessie M. Barron Memorial Carillon at St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, 16 Highland Avenue, Sunday, July 6, at 6 p.m.

The recital is best heard by listeners seated on the picturesque Cohasset Common. There is no charge and all are invited to bring lawn chairs, blankets, and picnic suppers. Programs will be available on the Common. Recitals take place rain or shine, and in case of rain you can still listen from your parked car.

Kehoe first began playing the Carillon while a student at Trinity College in Hartford, CT. He continue his training at the Royal Carillon School in Mechelen, Belgium. His recital program will include music from Handel as well as patriotic scores such as John Philip Sousa's "The Washington Post March" and other music appropriate to the Fourth of July weekend.

Carillons are particularly beautiful instruments of at least twenty-three bells. St. Stephen's Carillon with 51 bells is one of the world's finest. The smallest bell of this carillon weighs twelve pounds. The largest, called the "bourdon" bell, weighs 11,760 pounds. The carillon recital series at St. Stephen's, in its 62nd year, is the oldest, ongoing carillon program in the country.

Performances will be held throughout the summer on Sunday evenings at 6 p.m. Future recitalists include: Rene Vanstreels from Hasselt, Belgium; Richard M. Watson from I. T. Verdin Co. in Cincinnati, OH: Carlo van U lft from Venlo, The Netherlands; Michel Goddefroy from Tourcoing, France; Linda Walker Pointer from Clearwater, FL; Edward M. Nassor from Arlington, VA; and George Matthew, Jr. from Stamford, CT. The final recital by Sally Slade Warner of St. Stephen's Church on August 31 will include request numbers suggested by listeners during the previous weeks.

Second Congregational

Note from the Minister — During Rev. Wheeler's absence, emergency pastoral services may be arranged by calling church secretary, Muriel Wheelwright 383-1318, or Rev. Greg Messerole at home, 749-6303, or church office, 749-1276.

Choir Notes — Heartfelt thanks to each member for your time (at least three hours a week) and faithful, cheerful dedication. The Millard MacNeills will host the annual choir picnic and general celebration next Sunday at 1 p.m. at their home on Jerusalem Road.

Senior High Youth Group — is planning a weekend retreat for fall. If anyone has or knows of a cottage or resort which would be available and appropriate, call the church, 383-0345, or Susi Coley, 383-6160 with information.

Church School — The Christian Education Committee has selected a new Sunday School curriculum called Proclaim published by Augsburg Pub. Co. Offer to teach for just 10 weeks next year. We hope many will share the load so that everyone can help spread the Good News!

Needed — one of our church friends is seeking a small apartment or a live-in arrangement in the Cohasset area. If anyone reading this has such a space or knows of such, please contact the church office. The need is immediate.

In the Family — Our sincerest sympathies are extended to the family of Betty Poland who died June 20, and to the McCormack family upon the death of Michael, son of Donald and Phyllis McCormack and grandson of Vivian McCormack.

First Parish

From the Minister's Study:

Once again Dick and Sally Wheeler have organized a series of lay-led informal services of worship for the summer months. Last summer these services were beautifully done and offered a wonderful opportunity to learn something of the diverse talents and interests of the church members. The services are brief and are held at an earlier hour. You are welcome to attend in casual attire. We are very grateful to Dick and Sally and their group of willing volunteers for aiding us in providing a warm welcome and keeping the Meeting House open on Sunday mornings throughout the summer.

Summer Sunday Services 1986

To provide an opportunity for quiet meditation, renewal of spirit and the sharing of fellowship, the Meeting House will be open every Sunday this summer from July 6 through Aug. 31 from 9 to 10 a.m. for informal services. The leaders and their programs are listed below:

July 6, Jack and Vivian Mulligan, Impressions, UUA General Assembly 1986; July 13, Kornet Family members, piano selections and more grandfather stories; July 20, Linc and Iri Bloomfield, Global Megatrends—Or the Future Isn't What it Used to Be; July 27, Roberta Leary and Evelyn O'Brien, Playing Schubert and Marilyn Hobson, related readings.

The August leaders, schedule and progams will appear in the bulletin for August.

Sally and Dick Wheeler may be reached at 383-0968 for questions and comments. We look forward to your attendance and enjoyment of these summer services.

Parish News:

As you read this, Ed Atkinson and the Mulligan family will be attending General Assembly in Rochester, N.Y., as delegates from First Parish in Cohasset. Sunday, July 6, we begin this year's summer services with our impressions of the General Assembly.

Canvass Update:

Pledges to the Meeting House campaign now total $239,623.11. The Pledge Campaign is still lagging. To date we have $56,715 toward our goal of $70,000.

Parish Committee Meeting Reminder:

Monday, July 14 at 7:45 p.m. in the Parish House. All new members should be in attendance in addition to the two retiring members.

Newsletter:

This is the last newsletter until the end of July. If there are any news items for that newsletter, have them in the church office by Monday, July 28. The first fall newsletter will be published Tuesday, Sept. 2.

There's a political flavor to this cookbook

The first edition of "Bulfinch's Boston Faire" is a treasure...if you love just reading cookbooks, a must. The gold cover done by Susan Mosesso features an ink sketch of our historic golden-domed Stated House designed by Charles Bulfinch.

The introduction to the 230-page looseleaf book tells us of the Doric Dames who prepared this cookbook and how they volunteer their services as guides to acquaint residents and tourists with the beauty, history and legislative process of our State House.

In the summer there is a special program for junior guides as well as special tours in other languages for foreign visitors. Recipes selected for this book reflect their efforts to preserve our rich heritage, for their collection comes from people and places with which we're all familiar.

To mention but a few, there are receipes for Daniel Webster's Fish Chowder, Baked Stuffed Shrimp from the Blaine House in Maine, Nantucket Bluefish a la Gin, Oliver Wendall Holmes' Brandied Tenderloin Flambe and this appetizer called

HARVARD CLUB CHEESE

4 oz. cream cheese-room temperature
1/2 c. light cream
Tabasco Sauce-dash
1/2 T Worcestershire sauce

Grind cheddar with blue cheese. Blend with cream cheese. Scald cream and add gradually to cheese in blender or food processor. When smooth, add tabasco and Worcestershire. This freezes well, tightly covered. Soften to room temp before serving, as it spreads better.

Each of the 10 chapters is introduced by sketches and watercolors of old Boston, including one of the State House in 1805, in lonely splendor on Beacon Hill, approached by a curving drive leading to the stairs.

Mail-in voter petition nears November ballot

The Campaign for Mail-In Voter Registration recently filed initiative petitions containing over 24,000 additional signatures of Massachusetts registered voters.

These signatures represent the final legal step toward placing the issue on the November 1986 ballot, allowing the voters to decide if it will become a binding state law.

The initiative proposal would allow eligible citizens to register to vote by submitting an offical application by mail, as an alternative to in-person registration at a city or town hall. Twenty-three other states already allow voter registration by mail.

Director Robin Leeds said, "For years the State Legislature has failed to take action on this much-needed law. We are confident that the voters of this state will vote 'yes' this coming November 4, as one way to make our entire electoral process more accessible and accountable." Last fall 88,351 voters signed this initiative petition.

The legal process for initiative petitions requires that a minimum of 10,252 signatures be filed with local registrars of voters by June 18. Once these signatures are certified as valid and filed with the Secretary of State by July 2, the question is assured a place on the ballot. If a majority of voters approve it, it becomes law in January of 1987.

Among the groups active in gathering petition signatures were Fair Share, MASSPIRG, the League of Women Voters, the AFL—CIO, CPPAX, the Rainbow Coalition, Human SERVE, Jobs with Peace, and numerous other local groups.

The campaign has headquarters in Boston at 25 West Street, 426-4262.

A Stone's Throw — by Paul Steven Stone

Greetings from Heaven!

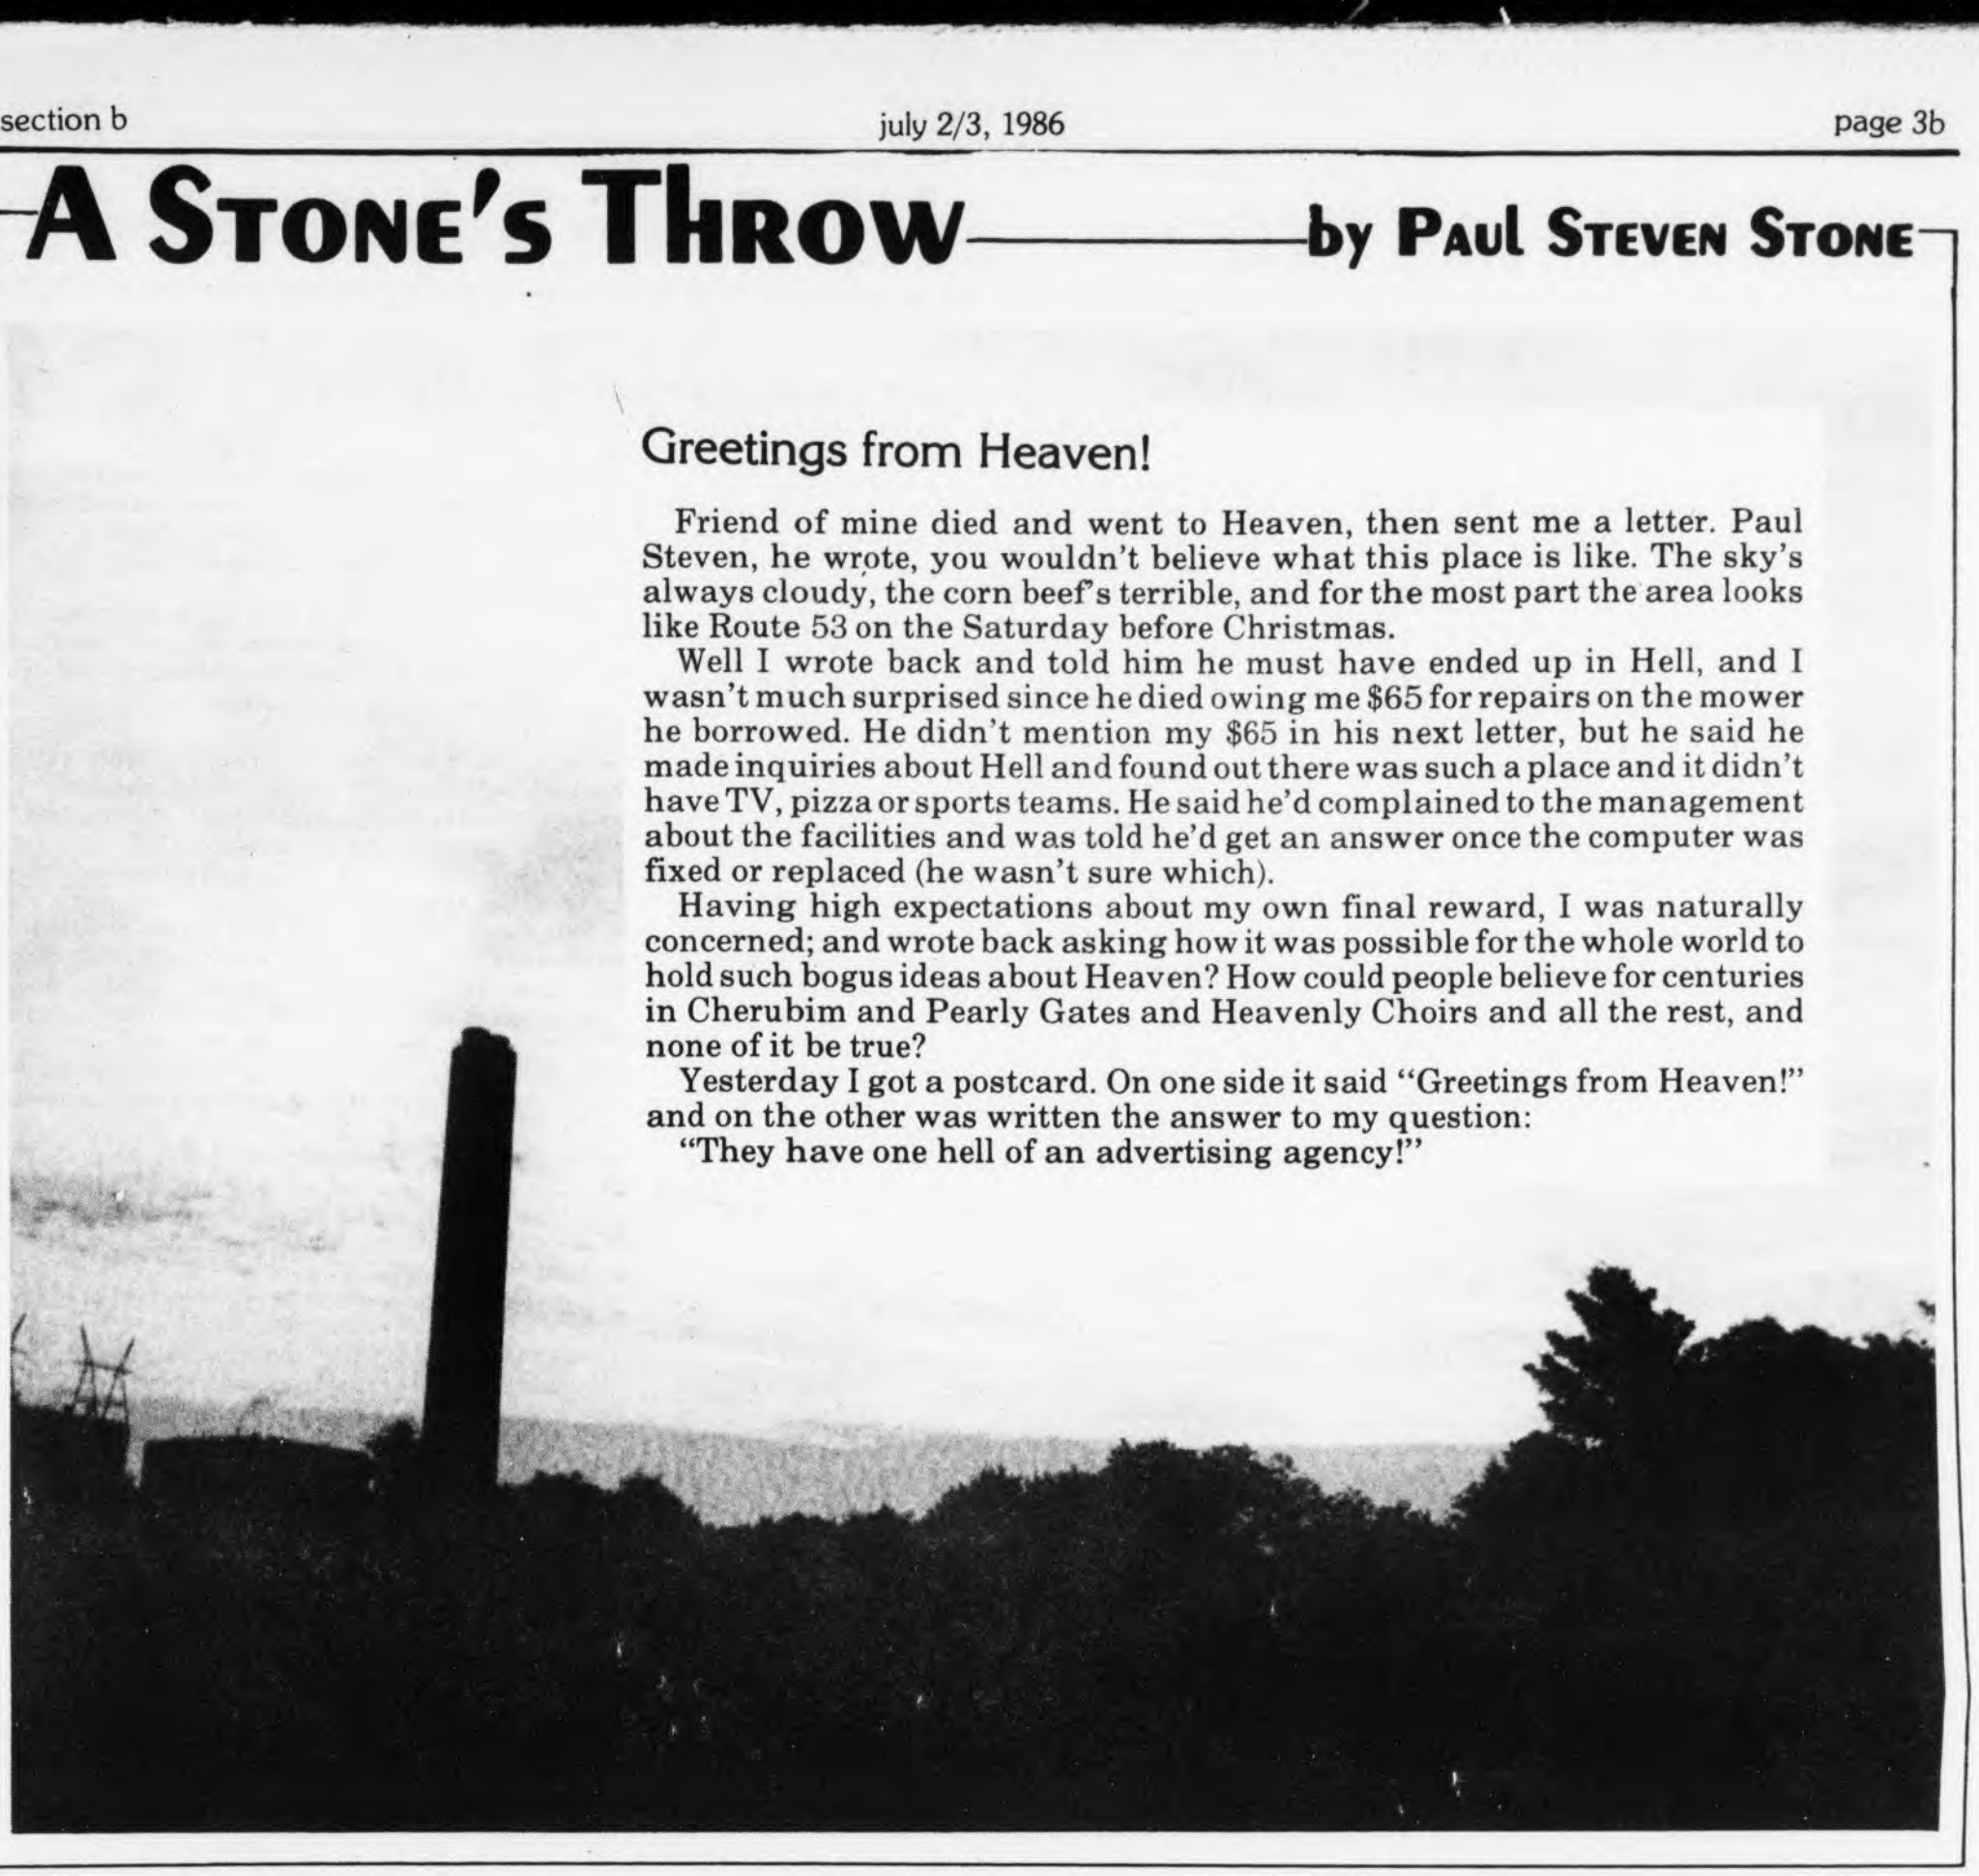
Friend of mine died and went to Heaven, then sent me a letter. Paul Steven, he wrote, you wouldn't believe what this place is like. The sky's always cloudy, the corn beef's terrible, and for the most part the area looks like Route 53 on the Saturday before Christmas.

Well I wrote back and told him he must have ended up in Hell, and I wasn't much surprised since he died owing me $65 for repairs on the mower he borrowed. He didn't mention my $65 in his next letter, but he said he made inquiries about Hell and found out there was such a place and it didn't have TV, pizza or sports teams. He said he'd complained to the management about the facilities and was told he'd get an answer once the computer was fixed or replaced (he wasn't sure which).

Having high expectations about my own final reward, I was naturally concerned; and wrote back asking how it was possible for the whole world to hold such bogus ideas about Heaven? How could people believe for centuries in Cherubim and Pearly Gates and Heavenly Choirs and all the rest, and none of it be true?

Yesterday I got a postcard. On one side it said "Greetings from Heaven!" and on the other was written the answer to my question:

"They have one hell of an advertising agency!"



Looking for a home for Danielle

By Barbara Rielly-Hubbard
Special to the Mariner

Danielle is a tall, athletic, quiet and very shy fourteen and a half year old black female. She is a unique and special adolescent. Danielle possesses a great sense of fairness and belief in what is right and wrong. She is not afraid to speak her mind or confront a friend when one has overstepped these bounds. Danielle has made tremendous gains in two residential programs to overcome the past traumas of sexual abuse.

Over the years, Danielle has worked very hard to resolve past anger, conflict and mistrust of men. Now, Danielle is able to distinguish between good men and bad men. At this time, Danielle has very positive relationships with a male teacher and tutor. She is also better able to communicate and share her feelings with others.

Danielle is a hard worker and conscientious student. Next year she will be in the ninth grade. Her school schedule includes one hour per day in the reading resource room. Danielle is also an excellent athlete. She excels in all sports. Her favorite ones are track, basketball and swimming. Danielle has no interest in drugs or alcohol. Danielle continues to work on her social skills in school, the community and in the residence. For example, Danielle arranges her own dentist and hairdresser appointments and is quite able to get around on public transportation.

Danielle is a very loyal individual. She makes strong attachments to special people in her life. It will be difficult for Danielle to say good-bye to her friends and workers in her present program.

The establishment of trust and communication will be initial hurdles for Danielle and any foster family to overcome. It is important for the new adults in Danielle's life to understand that underneath an initial cold, stoney self-protective exterior is a good sense of humor, sensitivity, warmth, affection and vulnerability.

If you have room in your home and your heart for an adolescent like Danielle, please call Barbara Hubbard of DARE Family Services at 628-3696. Professional training and support together with medical coverage and financial reimbursement are available.

NEARLY NATIVE — by DARRELL BERGER

'Solzhenitsyn's address reconsidered'

By now all the graduation ceremonies are over, and countless speeches by dignitaries have been consigned to oblivion. The commencement address has never been high art.

One address has survived. On June 8, 1978, Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn spoke to the graduates of Harvard University.

The Russian had been living in Vermont four years. His opposition to communism was known world-wide. His novel "The Gulag Archipelago" chronicled the horrors of Soviet prison camps. The United States welcomed him.

But the U.S. could never be his home. His speech criticized both east and west, and in the days following, editors from coast to coast commented upon it.

In brief, Solzhenitsyn criticized the lawlessness of the Soviet system which was ruled by the Communist Party rather than by a constitution.

He then criticized the U.S. for depending only on its legal system. "If one is right from a legal point of view, nothing more is required, nobody may mention that one could still not be entirely right, and urge self-restraint or a renunciation of these rights, call for sacrifice and selfless risk: this would simply sound absurd." He said, "Voluntary self-restraint is almost unheard of: everybody strives toward further expansion to the extreme limit of the legal frames."

In other words, where are the values that go beyond the letter of the law?

He also attacks the intrusiveness of the press, the constant emphasis on celebrity, the vulgarity of popular movies and culture.

A friend of mine attended the speech. He said, "I had tremendous respect for his novels, but I was disapponted in the speech. He hates communism, but is no lover of democracy either. I don't think he understands it. He'd rather be in Russia in the 14th century where Czar and God ruled together."

Solzhenitsyn is certainly an elitist. Like all elitists, he is convinced his taste in music and literature should prevail. Maybe by now he's learned that Americans with a taste for higher culture seek it out, and tolerate or ignore the vulgar. Still, he has a point. The amount of trash gets higher every day.

He also sees every world event as part of the conflict between the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. He calls us everything but wimps in failing to go to the barricades more often, or in withdrawing from Viet Nam.

Naturally his experience would lead him thus. However, if he had been an American in the 1960's he might have felt differently, or at least have seen that the anti-war movement embodied some of the higher values he finds lacking in our culture.

Regardless of how one responds to the speech, it makes one aware of how debased political discourse has become.

The leaders of the superpowers speak in diplomatic code to one another, and pour mass quantities of public relations bilge upon the people.

We know little about what kinds of discussions go on behind the Iron Curtain, but we know only too well the poor quality of debate we hear most commonly in America.

Polls show that only half our citizens know who the contras are. Interest groups shill for everything from affirmative action to the oil industry, but few voices of reason, moderation or enlightened disinterest are heard.

So, little matter that almost all of us will disagree with the address to some degree. More importantly, we understand that he makes some excellent points and sadly, that things have gotten worse since 1978.

Most sadly, he says, "A fact which cannot be disputed is the weakening of human personality in the West while in the East it has become firmer and stronger." The suffering of Russia has produced in its people a "spiritual training far in advance of Western experience."

That is, our affluence has made us lazy and boring, while the suffering of other cultures has strengthened them. If you have known people who have survived wars or oppression, you know what he means.

The depth of American character is being buried beneath materialism, status, trivial amusements and self-involvement. It is difficult to discover what is best in our personalities. Certainly Solzhenitsyn, from his reclusive and distainfully exaulted exile, has not found the depth of the American experience.

This American loves God as much as the Russian Orthodox Church, but doesn't require an orthodoxy to express it.

It values a press that is free to publish both the "Pentagon Papers" and "Penthouse".

If we suffer a dreary legalism it is because the legal system protects rights that no group can long ignore.

He also says, "Without any censorship in the West, fashionable trends of thought and ideas are fastidiously separated from those that are not fashionable, and the latter, without ever being forbidden, have little chance of finding their way into periodicals or books or being heard in colleges."

As a thinker of unfashionable ideas, I find a kinship with Solzhenitsyn that transcends differing experiences and perspectives. His speech suggests how much richer our culture might be if we took the time to look beyond the horizons of personal desire.

Coat of Arms

What's in a name?——Ramirez

By Frank Keady
Special to the Mariner

Each country has a name more popular than all others. In England, it's a tossup between Williams and Smith. Ireland has its numerous Murphys and Kellys. The Italian name Giovanni has high rank as a personal name and in Spain, there is no equal in numbers than those who bear the name Ramirez.

It is easy to see why Williams would become so popular in England after the Norman Conqueror had proclaimed victory over the Saxons at Hastings in 1066. Ramirez owes its popularity to similar beginning...Ramirez is a patronymic derived from the name Ramiro, a common name among the early Kings of Leon and first mentioned in the 8th century.

Garcia Ramiro is listed in records as one of the Spanish knights who fought the Moors at Granada, the last stronghold of the Moslems in Spain.

A battle was waged in 1492 under the order of Ferdinand and Isabella of Castile. Important to the success of this great battle was a skilled engineer named Francisco Ramirez who employed gunpowder to vanquish the Moors and gain victory for Spain.

The Ramirez name became a popular one in Leon and Granada where many families claim descent from King Don Ramiro I through his grandson by his third wife, Donna Ortiga. The Ramirez line of Madrid claim descent from Garcia Ramirez, one of the knights who in 720 A.D. captured the city from the Moors. Numerous knights of this name received their honors, title and noble claims in the Orders of Santiago, Calatrava, Alcantara, etc.

The armorial bearings of Spanish families closely parallel those of the Spanish Cities. Borders are popular, appearing in many coats of arms and sometimes reflect the colors or the charges found in the Kingdoms of Castile, Leon, Aragon and Navarra. These personal grants reflect the individual contributions of the Ramirez members who fought for Spain to achieve these ends.

The coat of arms pictured is of ancient issue yet is but one of many armorial grants to the Ramirez name.

The Dragon's Dungeon — By Claire McDonough

Why seven vehicles on the Dragon's property?

"This place," the Dragon roared, "is starting to look like a used car barn. Do you realize that there are seven motor vehicles on this property? We have got to straighten out the car situation in this family."

"Well," I began mildly, "this is a motorized society. You move to a town where everything is spread out and you really need a car. Just like in the early days, 350 years ago. Everyone needed a horse and some kind of a wagon."

"What's wrong with walking?" the Dragon asked. "These kids should be able to get anywhere in town on foot. They're young and healthy. It'd do them good to walk to Angelo's."

"Sure," I agreed. "to Angelos. Coming back carrying bundles is another matter. And though you may not have noticed it, our kids go places beside Angelo's. Skip needs a car to get to work, unless we want to drive him. And Larry works all over, so he needs a car. Same with Breida and Pat. And I hope you don't expect me to walk to Boston every day — with or without bundles."

"Counting my car," the Dragon pointed out, "that's still only six. Why are there seven vehicles on this property?"

"Only seven? Then I guess Ralph went home. And Larry must have left his truck at work."

"That's another thing," the Dragon said. "If Larry needs a car because he works in lots of different places, how come he uses a company car to go to work?"

"Because," I explained reasonably, "then he'd have to use his own gas to get back and forth. Besides, his car isn't in very good shape lately. Something wrong with his clutch, I think."

"Fine," the Dragon countered, "but you were the one who mentioned our ancestors with their horse and wagon. I'll bet most families didn't have seven or eight horses and wagons."

"They didn't go in all different directions, either," I pointed out. "Everyone worked on the farm. They went to church together on Sunday and they went to socials together. They only needed one vehicle. They didn't have jobs all over the state, ditto for social lives. They didn't have to take their kids to Little League, soccer, wrestling, Pop Warner, scouts, dancing class, karate lessons, part-time jobs or any of the other things that so enrich modern living. And horses didn't come with air-conditioning and in so may interesting colors."

"Okay," the Dragon said, "but that still doesn't explain why we have more cars than we have people. I'll bet even the Rockefellers and the Kennedy's don't have more cars than they have people. Are we unexpectedly affluent?"

"Au contraire," I assured him. "Jay's car is in the driveway because you told him he could leave it there till he could get it fixed, which will probably be in January 1994.

Breida bought a new car, but she gave her old one to Pat. But it breaks down a lot, so sometimes he uses hers and she uses Ralph's. Skip's shock absorbers and ball joints are gone, so he put his car in the back yard. He's going to fix it just as soon as he wins Megabucks. You should be glad I have a new car, because it takes up much less room in the driveway than the van I used to drive.

Then, the kids have lots of visitors, so their cars are often out front. We often have many more cars here than we have people, but most of them aren't operational. If Skip doesn't win Megabucks, we may have to plant flowers in his car and use it for a lawn ornament."

The Dragon moaned. "I'm not even going to try to figure that out. Would you just please explain to me why, when I wanted to go to Angelo's Wednesday there wasn't a single workable car on the property?"

"Probably," I told him, "for the same reason you can't go anywhere right now unless you use my car. Skip took yours to work."

A wicked glint came into the Dragon's eye. "Wednesday maybe. Not this time. I put all my car keys away and left yours on the rack. Guess how Skip got to work."

I groaned. "Not in my new car! We have got to straighten out the car situation in this family. What's wrong with that kid's legs, anyway? His ancestors used to walk much farther. And this place is starting to look like a used car barn."

Orchestra set for July 4th concert

The Plymouth Philharmonic Orchestra is ready for its second grand Fourth of July Pops Concert on the Plymouth waterfront. The free concert is made possible through the sponsorship of Jack Conway and Company, Realtors.

The 75-member orchestra, directed by Rudolf Schlegel, will play from a specially-constructed stage located in Pilgrim Memorial State Park (Water Street at the foot of Cole's Hill). The concert will be acoustically enhanced by a professional sound system designed by Terry Hanley Audio Systems, Inc. of Cambridge and will also be simulcast on WATD-FM 95.9.

The performance begins at 8 p.m. Works to be performed include Sousa marches, selections from "Porgy and Bess," music by John Williams, "A Salute to Duke Ellington," and the favorite 1812 Overture, complete with the firing of cannons and ringing of steeple bells. Best seating for the performance is on Cole's Hill, in Brewster Gardens and in Pilgrim Memorial State Park itself.

For more information about the concert, call 746-8008 during business hours. Rain date is July 5, same time and location.

Last year's Fourth of July performance of the Plymouth Philharmonic Orchestra drew hundreds of people and this year's concert at 8 p.m., July 4 on the Plymouth waterfront will probably draw a crowd also.

Musings — by John H. Cutler

What musical word has both a singular and a plural? Answer below.

When a resort becomes too popular, last year's lotus land becomes this year's tourist trap.

Mrs. Murphy's law: the average woman talks 50% more than her husband listens.

Julius Hare speaking: "Truth, when witty, is the wittiest of all things."

There is more brain power per square yard in Massachusetts than in any of the 49 states. Within 200 miles of Boston are 250 colleges and half of the state's 2,000 PhDs remain there.

The longest sermon on record lasted 48 hours and 18 minutes. A congregation of eight was present at the sermon's end.

A wise man knows when to speak his mind and when to mind his speech.

Faye Wattleton: "We must force people to pull themselves up by their own bootstraps, even if they have no boots."

Jean Kirkpatrick: "So I asked my son, who is a student, what I should speak about. 'I don't know,' he answered, 'but keep it short, and don't talk about foreign policy.' "

Tracy Kidder: "When thinking of commencement exercises, I am always reminded of Bob Hope's legendary commencement speech warning of the dangers and disappointments of the 'cold, hard world outside,' Hope gave his audience two words of advice: 'Don't Go.' "

It's a good book, if while reading it, you hope it will never end.

Answer to above quiz: The singular of opera is opus. The plural is operas.

He's seen the Sox come & go - What about '86 ?

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

In the summer of 1918, eight-year-old Ellery Clark of Cohasset started rooting for the Red Sox.

"I had the pleasure of watching Babe Ruth pitch in a regular season game that summer at Fenway," he recalled Monday.

Clark followed the Bosox to a world championship that year, the last time they achieved such success.

When they hoisted the championship banner on opening day the next year, he was there.

With every succeeding onset of pennant fever in the spring, and every September's broken heart, he was there.

As heroes flashed across the field, then faded into memory down through the years, Ellery Clark was there.

To the Red Sox as a team and to many individual players, he became more than just one of New England's many knowledgeable baseball fans.

"I have a nickname," he said, "given to me by Tom Dowd, a former travelling secretary of the Red Sox. He called me their 'unofficial corresponding secretary.' "

Clark, who has written three books on the Boston Red Sox explained, "I have corresponded for years with former Red Sox stars, asking them to describe their most thrilling moments, their problems and their most satisfying memories as Boston players.

"I go way back to the original team," he added. "I've had heavy correspondence with Cy Young and with Fred Perant, who played shortstop when Young pitched the perfect game in 1904. I've also had a bit of it with manager/third baseman Jimmy Collins."

His books, Boston Red Sox, Red Sox Forever, and Red Sox Fever he said "are unique in the fact that each one reaches a conclusion, a thinking man's conclusion."

He explained, "I'm a great believer in the intangibles of baseball, the winning spirit and dedication. You'll find my books full of letters which say, 'We played for the honor of winning and for the fun of playing, not for the money.' "

Clark said, "Contemporary baseball management, each team and even the players if they're interested, can draw helpful lessons from what's gone on in the past."

He added, "Some people didn't give a darn. When I first corresponded with Fred Lynn I asked, 'Are you interested? I'd be glad to give you some pointers of what the old Boston batting and fielding heroes did; for example, your predecessor for many years, Tris Speaker.'

"He wrote back," Clark said, "and answered that question very tersely. 'I'm not at all interested in the accomplishments of other baseball players.' "

Most of his correspondents were more congenial. The Red Sox left fielder of 1910, Duffy Lewis once confided, "Ellery, when we were ahead at the old Huntington Grounds and our side was in the field, we'd deliberately toss out a

A conversation with a real Cohasset native son

By Jane Lane
Mariner Staff

Sitting in his backyard under the shade of trees he helped plant, Bud Blossom has a great view.

Relaxing under the sprawling branches of a huge elm, Blossom looks out onto the gulf waters. Cool breezes greet those eyes protected from the gentle winds by glasses perched upon his nose.

From this view, Blossom's seen a lot of changes.

He was born 79 years ago in his father's home on Border Street. Today, he and his daughter, Carolyn, and her family live next door in his grandfather's home.

"I figure the front part of the house was built in 1825 and the back part here about 1875," he said. "The barn here in the back yard is an old post and beam, built about 1770. When I was a kid, the summer folks in the area would keep their horses in that barn.

"The old folks sure picked a good spot to live!" he said with a chuckle.

Blossom is a Cohasset native. That's a proud fact to this housepainter. He loves Cohasset, and easily recalls his childhood with fondness. He winces a bit at the prospects of its future.

"I have no desire to sell this home," he noted. "My daughter and her family live here now. They came when my wife was sick and stayed with her for two years before she died. We won't be selling this place in my lifetime.

"Unless, of course, I have to," he continued. "If they keep raising those taxes in town, maybe I'll be forced to sell. When my father died in 1958, I took over the house. Since that time, taxes have gone up 1100 percent."

Bud Blossom has opinions about most everything in Cohasset. He thinks about the future of the town he loves, and he worries. "My grandchildren are here now. But there's no way they can afford to buy a home in this town. The cheapest thing around here is probably $80,000 and that would be a shanty."

Although he was once told by a realtor he could get about $400,000 for his Border Street property, Blossom would rather part with the money than leave the former Bailey family farmland.

From his backyard overlooking the gulf, Blossom recalls his youth. Hayfields where he once romped are now filled in with trees along the river banks. "I was told that someone offered the owner of those three acres $750,000. Another house around the bend was bought for $20,000 in 1939. It sold just recently for $665,000," Blossom said.

"It's got to the point where no ordinary man can afford this town," he added. "I don't know what you can do about it. I couldn't afford this place today. And I don't know what my grandchildren are going to do."

Blossom, a familiar face around Cohasset, still paints occasionally. "Whenever I feel like doing something little," he commented. Although gracious and accommodating, he had to rush from his interview this week to drive to a friend's home where he promised to fix a door by noontime.

Town prepares for coming of cameras

No schedule has been set, but plans are proceeding as the town prepares to greet "The Witches of Eastwick."

Movie crews and cameras should arrive in Cohasset by the end of the month. According to Warner Brothers location manager Samuel Mercer, the schedule "still holds for the end of the month."

Construction crews which will dismantle and retouch Cohasset Village storefronts will begin their work a few days before the movie crews. "Everything is pretty close to being set," Mercer said. "But with this type of thing, everything has to be pieced together one bit at a time. You never know to the last minute if everything is going to go exactly according to schedule."

Once the crews arrive in Cohasset, they will stay for about a month, he added. "We'll be in an out for about a month. That's what we said from the start."

Town officials, who must coordinate parking, street re-routing and traffic details in the midst of the movie-making, are awaiting a schedule from Warner Brothers. Until that schedule is delivered, the town is not sure what plans will be followed and when.

Police Sgt. Robert Jackson is in charge of details for the local department. Although he anticipates a busy month for the Cohasset patrolmen, he cannot say when that spurt will begin.

"I was told to plan on having two to five men available each day for detail work," Sgt. Jackson said. "Warner Brothers will give us 48 hours notification before the detail. We really don't know when to expect them, or how long they will last."

The police sergeant said he has already contacted Scituate, Hull, and Hingham police departments, and the Norfolk County sheriff's department about

Cohasset's week . . .

No special election

John J. McNabb Jr. said he does not now support a special election.

"Last week I expressd support for a special election to fill the vacancy on the Board of Selectmen, and asked other Cohasset residents to support a petition drive to call for that election.

"Since then," he continued, "I have talked to close to 100 people in town about the issue. While I have found many people who did favor having the special election, I found also many people who were opposed.

"I talked to many residents who felt that a special election was not necessary, and that the $3,500 cost of having the special election is not necessary. I listened to their arguments and reexamined the issue.

"Although I still believe in principle that a special election should be held to fill the vacancy, I do not support having a special election at this time because of the cost which would be imposed on the town, and because I think that the town, overall, does not support having to bear that cost, he added.

"I am still concerned about the potential problem of tie votes on the board of selectmen, which now has four members and hope that the problem does not occur.

"If conditions change, or if there is another resignation from the board or a number of tie votes, I would hope that the board of selectmen would again consider the question of having a special election," McNabb said.

Railroad field notes

Cohasset's two representatives to the Old Colony Railroad citizens' advisory committee (CAC), outlined their comments during a recent walking tour of the railroad bed. Their comments were submitted to selectmen for their review.

CAC representatives Debbie Cook and Martha Gjesteby concluded the railroad right of way is basically intact. Although some residents have used it for unauthorized purposes, discontinuing these uses will not cause undue hardship, they determined.

The railroad right of the way is in town ownership and has been maintained for walking and horseback riding. The representatives also observed the air quality has the potential of being downgraded depending on the railroad equipment selected, location of stations and construction techniques.

Cook and Gjesteby made their comments following a two-day field trip in May. They were accompanied by naturalist Annette Sechen.

During their trip they observed there is a potentially dangerous railroad crossing for vehicular traffic coming down the hill from Pond Street to Spring Street. A large rock outcropping obstructs the car driver's view of the tracks.

The representatives also commented the Edison Plant might make a good parking site on North Main Street.

possible mutual aide in case of a detail overload this month and next.

"We have some men willing to do the detail work," he said, "but in the summer we have a lot of other obligations. We are only a 16-man department right now and we have the Music Circus details and lots of road construction now. We also have bridge construction details coming up.

"We'll try to keep everyone happy. But we don't know right now when the movie is coming in, and whether we can accommodate all the work," he noted.

The officers will be paid the normal detail salary rate of $17 per hour. That fee will be paid by Warner Brothers, including an extra $1.70 surtax charged by the town.

Executive secretary Donald Andrew said he has already met with several department heads to discuss town operations during the filming.

"What I think this will mean is some overtime for the highway department. I think they'll have to have someone go out early in the morning and post no parking signs around the various filming locations. Areas will have to be roped off and streets will have to be re-routed," Andrew said. "Say, if the crews are going to use the common one day for filming, the streets around the common will be posted the night before or the morning of the shooting. Everything will be coordinated once we receive a schedule from Warner Brothers."

Although anxious to know when the action will begin, Andrew will not accept a tenative schedule. "I don't want them saying anything until everything is definite," he added. "That would only serve to confuse everyone."

Recalling his days on Martha's Vineyard when "Jaws" and later "The Bostonians" were filmed there, Andrew noted, "the first few days, I expect they'll be large crowds gathering around to catch a glimpse. But they get bored pretty quickly. The crowds really thin out after a couple of days."

Fire Chief Daniel Brock said his department will be prepared to inspect any specialized equipment used in the filming. "If they are going to use any kind of heating, cooling or cooking equipment, we'll have to inspect it before they use is," he said.

And if any hazardous scenes are being shot, the fire department will station EMT's at the location for possible medical assistance.

Forest & park brochure

Mary Jeanette Murray in conjunction with the Dept. of Environmental Management has supplied the libraries in her district with a brochure about Mass Forest and Parks.

Mary Jeanette stated "The wonderful outdoor fun in Mass. State Forests and Parks has yet to be discovered by most of its people. "The pamphlet is a color pictorial preview of many of the state's glorious sights," Murray continued.

A state map gives directions and locations of Heritage Parks, Lakes and Rivers and Forests.

A chart lists alphabetically the names of areas and their Amenities plus the telephone number for further information and reservations for camping sites. Many locations have cabins, trailer/RV hookup, swimming, fishing, canoeing, hunting, horseback riding, skiing, bicycling and facilities for showers and restrooms.

Study committee to consider transfer station

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

The Disposal Area Study Committee Tuesday decided to investigate the transfer station design at Duxbury, an effort to "get moving" on plans for Cohasset's future dumping facility.

Nearly all proposals under consideration by the committee will require a local transfer station.

In 1984, the town voted $5,000 for a transfer station engineering study. Now, the committee wants to make use of those funds.

The town landfill has only about five years left for operation, leaving Cohasset a "short calendar" to find a solid waste successor.

Committee member Jeff Power explained, the leading candidate for Cohasset's future waste disposal is a proposed power recovery plant in Weymouth.

However, Weymouth has hit a snag in that they do not yet have a plan for a backup system. "They're looking at alternatives and open to proposals," Power said.

Originally, Cohasset was interested in joining Semass and sending its solid waste to a plant in Rochester, Massachusetts. However, Semass put the town on a waiting list, accepting only a letter of intent.

Since that time, Semass' standing has become unclear. Boston has dropped out of Semass and officials in Norwell have reported concerns with the project.

The committee decided to "look at Semass more carefully" and look at the Town's legal options regarding the letter of intent.

Committee Chairman Priscilla Tebbetts updated the committee on developments with the South Shore Coalition subcommittee on solid waste, with whom she met June 18 at Hanover.

She explained, a regional solution to solid waste disposal may not fit Cohasset's immediate needs. "There are some tricky questions to be resolved," she said. "For instance, which town would this thing be sited in?"

Power suggested, perhaps Cohasset could find a short-term solution to its impending problem, biding time while such long-term proposals for waste management develop.

Tebbetts added, the coalition pressed Governor Dukakis's proposal for recycling as much as 25 to 30 percent of town trash.

The committee agreed such a program would save money, as well as space at the dump, but it would be too difficult to implement.

The coalition, she said, is seeking commitments from Boards of Selectmen, indicating their towns are interested in a regional solution to solid waste disposal.

Power argued, "I don't think we ought to make any presentations until we've made a real choice."

Finally, Tebbetts said the coalition discussed pending legislation which would provide interest free loans and grants to towns for the purpose of solving landfill problems.

"Who knows what will happen?" she said.

Investigating transfer stations is the first step toward a future solution, the committee agreed.

"We need to collect information, so if we have to build one in the near future, we'll know what we're doing. The more we know about it, the better we'll be able to discuss it with the engineers.

Committee members will travel to Duxbury to investigate a facility there and will discuss their findings at the next meeting, August 5.

Federal coastal funding cuts

In a letter to selectmen Congressman Gerry Studds explained the Army Corps of Engineers has begun to implement a policy which would essentially end federal funding of small navigational projects which provide recreational benefits to communities.

Studds explained that in order for the Corps to fund a project such as navigation, beach erosion or any other small projects program, "the cost of the project would have to be exceeded by the value of its commercial benefits alone. If the project benefits only or primarily recreational users, or if the value to commercial interests is less than the cost of the project, it will not be funded by the Corps," he stated.

Studds noted Congress is now working to combine a House and Senate version of the legislation.

REAL ESTATE GUIDELINES

By Norma Telesco
Home Center Realty

LEARN FROM YOUR REALTOR

Good real estate agents can give you up-to-the-minute information about the homes for sale in their market areas. Their expertise, however, goes far beyond the basics of the local housing market, financing, and the other specialized skills needed to get you settled and into your new home.

If you're moving into a new area, your Realtor can be a valuable source of information about a wide range of subjects that will help you settle into the community quickly and easily. Where are the nearest schools and churches? What about recreational facilities, like community centers, swimming pools or tennis courts? Which markets have the freshest produce or the best buys on cat food?

Don't be afraid to ask for recommendations if you'll need a new hairdresser, veterinary hospital or babysitters. Good agents know the communities where they work inside and out, and they're glad to share their knowledge.

The professionals at HOME CENTER REALTY can serve all of your real estate needs. Please give us a call at 749-8833 or stop by our offices at 57 Water St., Hingham.

Elaine Wentworth, a graduate of the School of the Museum of Fine Arts, is a resident of Norwell and is well-known for her seascapes in oil. She has most recently worked in watercolor and is currently illustrating children's books.

Kathie Reynolds of East Bridgewater has studied at the Museum of Fine Arts, Massasoit College and the Brockton Art Museum and has lived and painted extensively in Texas and is a member of the Southwestern Watercolor Society.

Ben Fuller, a graduate of the Boston Art Institute and the School of the Museum of Fine Arts, has incorporated a wide range of local scenes into his watercolors and in 1985 won First Place in the Cape Cod Art Association Summer Show.

Jacqueline Wirth of Cohasset, a self-taught artist, is well-known for her seascapes in oils and is currently exhibiting small seascapes in acrylics.

This exhibition will run through August 31. Barbara D. Gurnis, Gallery Coordinator, will answer any questions at 749-3264.

Local woodcarver produces some spirit for 'Eastwick'

By David Johnson
Mariner Staff

Certain African tribes regard woodcarving as a sacred art because it is believed that the woodcarver makes a home for the spirits of the dead, thus preventing them from roaming about and harming the living.

This summer, with the filming of The Witches of Eastwick, the spirits of Scituate's past will be brought to life, and the work of local woodcarver Paul McCarthy will help make them feel right at home.

McCarthy, who says he feels sign carving is a revival of an early American tradition, has carved several signs for the movie, including "The Yapping Fox," which will hang at the Quarterdeck on Front Street in Scituate Harbor, which will be a gift shop in the film.

Other signs for the newpaper, "The Eastwick Word," "Eastwick Hardware," an ice cream store and a deli will probably hang in Cohasset, where the major portion of the movie is being filmed.

McCarthy, who estimates he has carved 18,000 signs in his career, said he enjoys working with the movie people. "They have a big budget,"

But he is used to undertaking celebrity commissions. He carved and painted the sign on the U.S.S. Constitution, which at 36 feet long is the longest sign he's ever done.

"My signs are all over the world," the Scituate native said. He recently finished a sign for "The Swizzle Inn" in Bermuda. For the Lipton Tea Co., McCarthy produced a billboard-sized sign that covered the whole floor of his Front Street shop, Paul McCarthy's Carving Place. He has done several for Disneyland and hundreds for homes and businesses throughout the South Shore, including the huge mariner at Kimball's by the Sea in Cohasset.

Prices start at $75 for a sign three feet long and rise rapidly, depending upon the size of the lettering, amount of carving and whether gold paint is required. He charges about $500 for a sign containing a carved eagle.

"I started (wood carving) in Scituate High School at 15-years-old, and I never stopped." He said Robert Burgess was the shop teacher who first encouraged him. He continued carving during the five years he served as a medic in the Air Force and later when he worked at the Post Office.

"If you keep on doing something, you get good at it," he said.

In 1969, he opened his first shop on Cole Parkway, later moving to Front Street. McCarthy carves 200 to 300 signs a year. Although most of his business is in signs, "anything that can be carved in wood, I'll do," he said.

McCarthy has won a number of bird carving contests. Birds, mostly sold to collectors, cost between $500 and $3,000 dollars. "Everyone who wants an eagle wants it custom-designed; nobody wants an off-the-shelf eagle," he said.

The best carving woods, McCarthy said, are basswood, pine and maple. "Redwood is too brittle."

One of McCarthy's seven assistants, Jim Diegel of 114 Arborway, Scituate, said, "Pine is the easiest to carve," while Nick Lonborg of 486 First Parish Road said he favored Honduran mahogany.

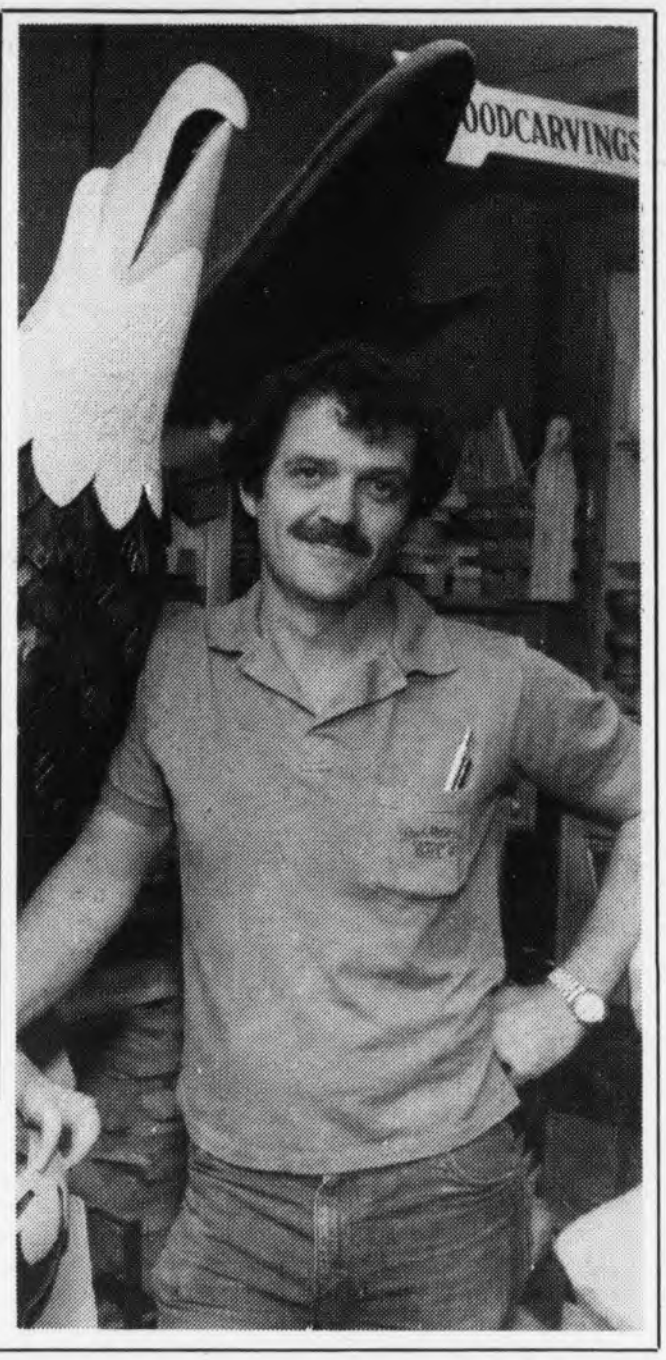
He has also authored two books on woodcarving, published by Stackpole Press, outdoor book publishers.

McCarthy also offers classes at his shop (10 weeks for $75). About six students were working on various projects, adding to the informal, chaotic atmosphere.

Joyce Martin of Marshfield has been working on a Clydesdale horse for two months, "just for fun." Other students said they carved to relieve tension and for a hobby.

McCarthy said many of his students later go into business on their own.

"It's a fun place to work, but we get things done," he said.



Paul McCarthy of Scituate, woodcarver extraordinaire, poses against one of his prize works. McCarthy has been busy creating signs to be used in the "Witches of Eastwick" along Cohasset Village.

LONG TERM NURSING HOME CARE PLAN

PEACE OF MIND TODAY! SECURITY TOMORROW COVERING CONVALESCENT CARES-CUSTODIAL CARE & HOME CARE BENEFITS-UP TO 5 YEARS.

Let's take a moment to consider the past. You probably spent a lot of time and hard work building the foundation for a comfortable future. You prepared yourself for today, but what about tomorrow?

What would become of your savings or your home should you have to endure a long illness? How long could you keep these assets and obtain quality convalescent care?

Have you considered your family's assets? Hopefully they would not have to provide anything but love, but they too must consider their future. Will you have to burden them with your expensive convalescent care expenses?

An intelligent way to answer the above questions and avoid financial hardship is to have adequate protection that will help you and your family plan a more secure and self-sufficient future.

Young People's Summer Theater musicals

In 1982, he thought the ultimate challenge was to sink the Titanic on stage. Two years ago, he thought it was going to be building a forty foot train which would open up in full view of the audience.

But this year, Director Don Capen of the Young People's Summer Theatre seems to be facing what could be the biggest challenge of his directing career and the biggest challenge YPST has ever faced: the staging of two full-scale musicals with casts of over 100 youths between 13 and 22 years old.

Never before has YPST prepared 2 large cast shows in the same amount of rehearsal time as allotted for one. And now, six evenings and one afternoon a week, the cast assembles in preparation to perform what eventually will be over 50 musical numbers.

The first musical, "Sugar," is based on the film "Some Like It Hot" and was first performed on Broadway in the early 1970s. The leading roles of Joe and Jerry will be performed by Joe Celli of Pembroke and Greg Palmer of Marshfield.

The title character, Sugar Kane, is being played by Beth Hodgkins of Scituate. She is making her debut with YPST, along with Celli.

Supporting roles include Doug Mathews of Scituate as Bienstock, Chris Roman of Pembroke as Sir Osgood Fielding, Tom Fusco of Scituate as Spats and Jen McCarthy of Marshfield as Sue.

"Sugar" will be presented at Scituate High School July 31, August 1 and 2 at 8 p.m. But then, only one week later, another monumental production will take place: the 10th Anniversary Gala Musical Revue.

This year marks YPST's tenth summer of educational theatre, not to mention 17 musical productions. In celebration, Capen has assembled some of the alumni and Aug. 8-9 more than 35 musical numbers from all YPST productions will be presented, with some performers recreating their original roles.

"There were over 350 musical numbers I had to choose from" Capen said at a recent meeting to discuss upcoming "problems" with the shows. "Except for a few, they all had their own memories, but obviously if we presented them all we'd be on stage until December." So, Capen carefully structured an outline with memorable and entertaining numbers which would eventually make a two-hour plus show. "It's straight entertainment, with a few yuks in the middle and some YPST history. We're just very proud of all the kids and everything we've done."

Assisting Capen with getting the shows together are Michele Pecoraro, formerly a YPST choreographer, who has returned to not only recreate some of her staging but also to perform. Peter Tolan, co-founder of the group, will also be back to serve as host with Capen. "I think for me, that's the most exciting part of the whole celebration. Peter and I worked very hard at getting this group off the ground, and worked closely for four years. Now, six years later, we're getting a chance to work together again for one of the proudest achievements in both our careers."

Tickets for both shows are on sale Monday through Thursday evenings at the Congregational Church, or by calling 871-5831. The public is urged to purchase them in advance ($4) or they may buy them at the door ($5).

FUNDRAISING AUCTION

The public is reminded that the Young People's Summer Theatre will hold a fundraising auction this Saturday, July 12 at St. Luke's Episcopal Church on Rt. 3A in Scituate. There will be a pre-auction viewing at 7:30 p.m. with the event beginning at 8 p.m.

The auction will be held to raise funds for YPST, which is celebrating its 10th anniversary this summer. Because the expenses for producing two musicals are monumental, the group is holding this event in hopes of raising additional funds to defray costs.

Also, some funds will go into the Scholarship fund which YPST awards each summer.

Many goods and services will be available for bidding. There is an admission charge of $2 and free snacks will be served.

Audubon program at Black Pond

Is a horseshoe crab really a crab? Do some of the birds seen by the shore actually come all the way from the Arctic?

What is a barrier beach and is seaweed edible?

Find out the answers to these questions and more every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday. Meet a seaside naturalist from the Massachusetts Audubon Society at the east end of the Powder Point Bridge by 9:30 a.m. and take a walk on Duxbury Beach. You'll learn a lot, get some exercise and have a good time.

This free program is sponsored by Duxbury Beach Reservation Inc. Other up-coming programs include wild wetlands, a program for children ages 7 to 9. A pond, a bog and a tidal river will be investigated on July 10 and 11. Cost is $6 members, $8 non-members. It will be held from 9 a.m. to noon. A natural history walk at Black Pond Preserve will be held at 10 a.m. on July 12. Fee is $2 for members, $3 non-members.

Meet at Black Pond. Pre-register for all programs. A program of night music, night investigations for children and their parents, will be held July 17 at 8:30 p.m. Call for more information.

An interpretive paddle on the Green Harbor River will be held from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. on July 19. There are a few spaces left so call now to register. There will be a $7 fee for members, $9 non-members.

A slide-shown lecture, "Hot Springs on the Sea Floor," will be held at the Audubon Sanctuary Thursday, July 10 at 7:30 p.m. This program wa rescheduled from July 3 to July 10. Hot-spring vents are fascinating and valuable areas of the ocean. A researcher from Woods Hole Oceanographic Institute will share facts and theories of hot-springs.

☐ Linda Sheppard makes the news this week, thanks to all of her efforts at college. Linda, in her fourth year at the University of Mass., Boston, made the Dean's List. She is majoring in Business and Sports Medicine, is active on the swim team and was a lifeguard there last year. Right now she's doing what she loves best, she is working as a lifeguard in Weymouth for the summer.

☐ Clark Chatterton is hard at work again. He's selling tickets to two shows to benefit the Fred S. Troy Scholarship Fund. He has tickets to the Joan Rivers Show and the Harry Belafonte Show. As you undoubtedly know, last year's scholarship was given to Charlie Davis' family, so all of you that have contributed to this should be proud of yourselves! See Clark for details, and try to attend!

☐ Cohasset sure was hopping last weekend, and the Greek Taverna topped everything off. What fun to walk around and see smiling faces, eat yummy food and socialize. Even a lot of the politicians made it to the event, it's that famous now! Can still taste the lamb. . .

☐ If you are looking for "something to do" this summer, the library may hold the key for you. Our own State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, has arranged for the library to have brochures about the Massachusetts forests and parks. The pamphlet shows pictures of many of the state's spectacular sights, and there is a state map that gives directions and locations of Heritage Parks, lakes, rivers and forests. There is a chart that lists names of areas and their amenities plus telephone numbers for information and reservations. This is done in conjunction with the Department of Environmental Management, and it sure helps to see what fun we can have without even leaving our state.

☐ I'll bet that our young people can't wait to take up Mayor Victor Prudhomme's offer to go to Souppes-sur-Loing for a month, especially since he has included jobs to go with the trip — Who wouldn't give his "eye-teeth" to do that!

☐ Congratulations to the new members of the Board of Directors at the Community Center. Harold Litchfield, Matthew Sullivan, Jack Conway and Melissa Shea. Their work is cut out for them with all of the plans that the Center has, and they are sure to do a good job.

☐ Isn't it nice to see that our little town is full of budding artists! Congratulations to Jeremiah Stevenson, David Zadel, Peter Sheppard, Heather Lyons, and Allie Redfield — all received awards at the South Shore Arts Festival that was held recently.

☐ If you didn't get to appear at the casting call of "The Witches of Eastwick," you still have a chance of to show them your "Cohasset Look." Just send a picture and personal data to: The Casting Company, 132 Brookline Ave., Boston, MA 12215. And, you don't even have to wait in a long line!

☐ Be sure that your little one (aged 3½ to six) gets in on the fun at the Library, where there will be story hours starting this Friday at 10 a.m. in the children's room.

☐ If you didn't do so last week, do it now! Be sure to try "Fruits of the Sea Casserole" that was in Joan Pinkham's "From the Kitchen" column last week. Wonderful!

☐ Had a nice chat with Erwin Cone last weekend. What a super guy! His plans are going right according to schedule, and he is so happy! He was delighted when I jumped a foot after seeing a huge snake in the back of his station wagon. It was fake, meant to scare varmints out of the garden, but you could have fooled me! Best of luck to you, Erwin, in your new venture, and to the new owners of the Red Lion Inn.

Down the tubes! Laura Slotnick, 8, slides down apparatus at the Osgood School playground, as her brother Caleb, 12, watches in anticipation.
(Alan Chapman)

☐ Here's hoping that Ruth Goodwin is all better as she reads this, after her recent stay at South Shore Hospital.

Wait 'till April

Last week's news of the resignation of selectman Mary Jane McArthur surprised most people. Without warning, the board was reduced to four members.

Immediately, at least two potential candidates for the office stepped forward. One publicly announced the intention of petitioning for a special election, the other did not favor such action.

While town bylaw requires a five-man board, there are emergency situations where less members are sufficient. This is one of those situations.

Three years ago, town meeting supported expanding the three-man board to five members. The thought then was more opinions expressed and more viewpoints heard, would provide a more stimulated, more enlightened, more representative board of selectmen. Many were skeptical of the theory. But after three years, most people are convinced that a five-member board is not unwieldly, cumbersome or unnecessary. Together with the expanded role of the town's executive secretary, the five-man board has worked well for the town.

Now the board is reduced by one. There are four remaining representatives sharing views, expressing opinions, making decisions for the town. We feel for the next 10 months, until the annual election in April, the four-member board will suffice.

As with many other residents, we will keep our eye on deadlocked votes. If too many two-two splits occur, it will be time to rethink our option of a special election.

But for now, with the prospect of no special town meeting in the fall, the June meeting behind us, and municipal contracts recently completed, there is no dire need for that fifth member.

We support the five-member board of selectmen and feel it has worked successfully for the residents of the town. But a temporary reduction should not harm the community by any significant margin.

We hope everyone is aware of this situation, and keeps a close watch on the happenings at town hall. The meetings are regularly covered in the newspapers, and are televised on the local cable channel. It may be dry reading, but it is important and does affect every taxpayer in the community.

It's important for every resident to be aware of the issues and to watch how their elected officials are representing you by his votes and his comments.

By next April, there are sure to be several candidates vying for the vacant seat. This lapse will give us ample time to examine the issues and the candidates.

BEAUTY'S PLACE

Cohasset in the springtime
A lovely place to be.
The lilacs and the dogwood
Are quite a sight to see.

The winding roads and country lanes
With trees all shades of green,
The quaint and lovely houses
All snuggled in between.

O, yes, I know Cohasset
Is just the place for me.
I glory in the feeling;
That's where I want to be.

Funding delay because of officials

To the Editor:

Stephen Bartow's letter of July 3 suggests that state funding has been delayed because of interference from those who believe the Ward plan is a non-solution. The reason state funds have been held up is the intransigient behaviour of our sewer commission. There are many letters from DEQE to confirm this.

Cohasset's attempts to set itself above the rules that apply to everyone else, failure to provide information and design conformance to the funding authority, delusions about funding, and two idiotic appeals to EPA to override DEQE, has chewed up the years. To do nothing as long as possible suits a lot of people, but don't blame the delay on the opponents of these shenanigans.

I've never met with DEQE, and brief infrequent telephone calls to obtain confirming information have been very mindful of DEQE's need not to prejudice its dealings with elected officials. The misinformation provided the town by the sewer commission suggests that we do need some sort of objective and independent review committee (not the old Sewer Advisory Committee) consisting of representatives for Selectmen, Board of Health, and other responsible bodies. Meanwhile, the intervention by Senator Golden seems to have discouraged some of the game playing and encouraged cooperation.

As for voting four times to proceed with the Ward Plan, each vote was taken on the basis of erroneous and incomplete information. In any case, Cohasset's Waste Water Plan is not really the Ward Plan, it is "to do anything but build our own adequate treatment plant." Proponents of an adequate plan are too early labelled as "having a special interest". But the others each have a special interest—their own immediate pocketbook, which transcends the long term interest of the town. Ironically, for those who remain here, the long term cost to each may be much greater than it need to have been.

We've missed the golden opportunity to have our own adequate plant, largely funded by the state. But we've also increased the cost of the alternative by senseless confrontations with the regulations. We can't have our cake and eat it, nor can we expect funding while defying the authority which grants funding.

It is fortunate that two DEQE officials attended the sewer commission presentation on May 15, and quietly corrected Mr. DeSantis on a few points. They indicated continuing concerns with some aspects of our plan, as well as reservations about whether the Hull connection would be consummated. At least three members of the Advisory Committee were present, but evidently didn't get the message, judging from the negative recommendation at town meeting. I guess that demonstrates that some among us will continue to believe in accordance with their prejudices, right up until denouncement. But the skeptics are increasing in number, judging from the close vote on Article 15. The vote might have been closer, or reversed, if Mr. DeSantis had not issued a special flyer to Hill District residents, promising something better than had been implied in the Commissions presentation May 15.

The plea for a united front sounds good, but let's be sure it isn't just a parade of lemmings headed for the cliff. That's why an independent review was requested in a citizen's petition, and it's why I maintain that there continues to be a need for independent and objective examination. Mr. Bartow may think the town meeting form of government works well, and that is an adequate arena for resolving points of view. But it'squite clear that the system has failed to reveal important considerations, on this and other issues. The questioning is not tough enough, nor informed enough, and too often a smooth talker carries the day even when he or she is wrong. But that's a universal problem, I guess.

Letters

Not for election

To the Editor:

I would like to respond to John McNabb's letter in last week's Mariner which urged townspeople to support his petition for a special election.

One of the most convincing arguments proposed by petitioners for a five-man board of selectmen was that it would give board members themselves more latitude on the board. More importantly, a resignation from the five-member board would not leave the board with too few members to conduct town business, or force the town or the selectmen to call for a special election.

Mr. McNabb has referred several times in the past week to the small amount of money it costs the Town to hold a special election. While the $3,500 to $4,000 is not a large sum, the larger monies which selectmen candidates must raise, from their constitutents, can be quite sizeable.

While I feel Mrs. McArthur's resignation was unfortunate, and I know her board will miss her input, I feel we have an excellent board of selectmen fully capable of carrying on the business of town government.

I hope petitioners for a special election will strongly consider not filing their petition with the selectmen at this time, for the reasons stated above.

Pastor finds Updike novel vulgar & profane

Letters

To the Editor:

There is a mixed reaction from the public concerning the upcoming film, from condemning opposition to an excited welcome.

As a pastor in this community, I felt it was important to be somewhat familiar with the book upon which this film is based in order to write with legitimate criticism. Its content was even worse than I had imagined with its sexual overtones, its message of hopelessness, and in its making witchcraft out to be largely an honorable practice.

It is a real matter of importance to determine whether this film is pleasing to God and thus beneficial to this community, or not. I am fully aware of the fact that pleasing God is not a concern to some. Others are inclined to love and serve God but are perhaps uninformed either about the contents of the novel or about the possible negative influence this film can have on them and on this community. It is to these people that I make my appeal to think twice about your involvement in this film.

People who respect God should evaluate all things in light of what God has said in the Bible. This even applies to participating in a film. First of all, concerning witchcraft, we find in the Old Testament book of Deuteronomy, chapter 18 verses 10 through 13 the Word of the Lord which says: "Let no one be found among you who practices divination, or sorcery, interprets omens, engages in witchcraft, or casts spells or who is a medium or spiritist or who consults the dead...Youmust be blameless before the Lord your God."

Also, as I read from Updike's novel, it became clear to me the large void of Christian values and respect for our God. I found the book to be terribly vulgar and profane, overtly gross in sexual affairs and adultery, a put down of children who were depicted as brats and hindrances to adults' pleasure seeking.

The book seemed to have little esteem for the family. There was even a casual approach to murder! Along with witchcraft, these practices and values are contrary to the Bible's teaching.

These things are hateful to God. Why? Because they are ultimately hurtful to us. God's commands are motivated by His loving desire for our well-being which comes about when we obey Him.

Our response then, should be to avoid participation in this film in any manner. Yes, we know Warner Brothers is producing a ficticious movie based on a ficticious book. The problem is, regardless of the intention of the story, it is not presenting God's view, and thus directly and subtly promotes behavior to young and old which is hateful to God and consequently unbeneficial to us and to our community.

If we are able to see through the shallow thrill of Hollywood and the enchantment of the moment, than we may better understand what is happening to us. Shall we for the fantasy of the world's excitement sell our souls to the hateful in God's sight. Whether fiction or reality, to not stand against the perversions and the wickedness of our media is to give our approval of its seduction of our society.

I appreciated the book review of 'The Witches of Eastwick' by Richard Hayes, the Director of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library which was published in the June 26 Cohasset Mariner.

I close this article with a line from his last paragraph regarding the book, "...there are no parts in the book that any good citizen of Cohasset I know would want to play".

Referring to the Bible

To the Editor:

To the person who sent the note of condemnation to many of the churches in the town of Cohasset about the movie "The Witches of Eastwich." I am a member of Cohasset Baptist and I have spoken out against the movie. My reasoning is because of what God says about witchcraft in Deuteronomy 18 verses 10 and 11 which read as follows: "There shall not be found among you anyone who makes his son or his daughter pass through the fire, one who uses divination, one who practices witchcraft, or one who interprets omens, or a sorcerer, or one who casts a spell, or a medium, or one who calls up the dead."

I believe if you knew Jesus Christ as your Lord and Saviour you would be more effective infighting the "Witches of Eastwich."

Thank you for reading this reply.

Sen. Golden wants Pilgrim's future reassessed

By State Sen. William Golden
Special to the Mariner

Commentary

The Pilgrim nuclear power plant, now in a temporary shutdown, should remain closed until government officials, Boston Edison and the public can reassess the future of the Plymouth facility.

This review is needed in light of recent Nuclear Regulatory Commission criticism of Boston Edison and heightened public awareness of nuclear risks since the Chernobyl accident.

Such a reassessment should focus on five issues: emergency preparedness, management, containment technology, terrorism and economics.

Chernobyl and Three Mile Island have taught us that nuclear accidents can and do happen and that we should be ready for the consequences.

Massachusetts is woefully unprepared for a serious accident at Pilgrim. State and local emergency plans cover an area within only 10 miles of the plant, which is all the NRC requires.

Experts disagree on whether the plans would protect all within the 10 mile zone. However, everyone agrees that there are no nuclear emergency plans for anyone who lives beyond 10 miles.

The NRC's own studies indicate that a sudden meltdown or explosion would spread dangerous radiation levels well beyond 10 miles.

Such an accident at Pilgrim would threaten Cape Cod or the heavily populated areas around Boston or New Bedford.

If radiation drifted toward Cape Cod, the 10 mile plan could make matters worse because it would seal off the Sagamore Bridge — one of only two escape routes from the Cape.

Before Pilgrim reopens, a realistic emergency plan, covering a 40 mile area around the plant, should be prepared.

A second issue that must be addressed before the plant goes on line is the adequacy of the plant's management.

In 1982 the NRC fined Boston Edison $550,000 for management and safety deficiencies. More recently, commission members labeled Pilgrim one of the five worst-run plants in the country.

These problems are particularly disturbing because human error appears to have been critical in both the Three Mile Island and Chernobyl accidents. Edison deserves praise for acknowledging and acting to correct these problems. However, the management restructuring is still in process. All changes should be firmly in place and scrutinized by regulators before the plant reopens. An operating nuclear plant is no place for on-the-job training.

A third safety concern is Pilgrim's Mark I containment structure, which is intended to block the escape of radiation in the event of an accident.

Important advances have been made in containment technology since Pilgrim was designed in the late 1960s. Harold Denton, the NRC's chief safety official, recently questioned the ability of the Mark I containment system to withstand a core meltdown.

The adequacy of Pilgrim's containment should be reassessed and the system upgraded to the highest standards that current technology can offer.

The vulnerability of the plant to terrorism is a fourth safety issue that should be reviewed before the plant resumes operation. In recent years, terrorists have become more daring and sophisticated. Terrorists today can seize a huge cruise ship and penetrate airport and embassy security systems. The public needs reassurance that nuclear plants are secure from this new danger.

Finally, the economics of Pilgrim should be reassessed, particularly in light of the costs of needed safety improvements. In calculating Pilgrim's true costs we need to more accurately estimate such expensive problems as facility decommissioning and replacement.

In addition, we must take into account items which may not show up on a company's balance sheet, such as the public costs of civil defense, government regulation, waste disposal and uninsured public liability.

Whether Pilgrim reopens on schedule or stays closed indefinitely, is not the answer to our long-term energy needs. Nuclear plants have a projected lifespan of only 40 years and Pilgrim will have to close early in the next century. With energy prices down and electricity supplies plentiful, we may never find a more opportune time to re-examine the issues surrounding Pilgrim.

We need to weigh all of the alternatives — nuclear, conventional and renewable energy sources, as well as conservation. Government, which heavily subsidized the development of nuclear power, now must be prepared to subsidize the development of safe, reliable energy.

Planning our energy future will require not merely cooperation between the utility industry and government but a genuine partnership. Deciding the future of Pilgrim is where this partnership should begin.

Reader Survey . . .

Do you feel the Plymouth Nuclear Power Plant should be reopened?

- ☐ Yes, after the Nuclear Regulatory Commission (N.R.C.) certifies the plant as safe, the plant should be reopened.
- ☐ No, the inherent risk of a nuclear power plant accident at the Plymouth site is too great and the plant should be permanently closed.
- ☐ Other comment.....

Red Tide continues in harbor

The ban on all shellfishing throughout the waters and flats of Cohasset has been extended.

According to health agent Dr. Joseph Godzik, there has been no notice from the state lifting the ban which prohibits harvesting all shellfish in Cohasset.

The state Department of Environmental Quality Engineering (DEQE) issued a Red Tide alert throughout Cohasset, Scituate, Marshfield, Duxbury and Plymouth several weeks ago. Mussels in those communities were contaminated by paralytic shellfish poison, and as a result, the state banned the harvesting of all shellfish in those communities.

The contamination line begins at the Cohasset-Hull town line to Manomet Point in Plymouth.

Because no word has been received from the state ordering the ban to be lifted, Dr. Godzik assumed the alert remains in effect.

A conversation with a Cohasset native son

He was a member of Cohasset High School's graduating class of 1924. There were nineteen in the class who attended the Osgood School. Although admittedly no scholar, Blossom learned to read, write and do mathematics. "That's more than a lot of kids learn now-a-days," he said. "Some of these kids coming out of the high school can't read. Why, they have more administrators and brass hats there now, and the kids aren't learning what they're supposed to.

"My nephew once showed me how he learned 'modern math.' It took him ten minutes to multiply two figures. I did it in a few seconds. That modern math is a bunch of bull. Maybe we had teachers back then without all that education, but they were good teachers."

The painter leaned back on his comfortably worn lawn chair. "Now you have all these administrators, I saw how the town just spent $400,000 on clerical services. That's ridiculous. You know, it's that old saying, bureaucracy builds upon itself, until finally there's nothing left."

Blossom does not often attend town meeting anymore. "I'm disgusted with it," he complained. "When you stop and think about the people that go up there and then article four, the town's entire budget, goes bang, bang, bang without any discussion. We appropriate 90 percent of the town's money without a word, and then we fight about some $75 street light.

"I don't get steamed up about issues like I used to. I get teed off, but not steamed up," he laughed. "I guess it's like a voice crying in the wilderness. When I was younger I went."

As a young boy, Blossom would swim in the gulf -"the edges are muddy and gooey, but the middle is about 12 feet deep." Skating along the frozen waters was a favorite sport of winter. "That was when winters were colder," he noted. "That was when they would be able to cut two crops of ice from Lily Pond. And you needed 12 inches of ice for that. Now, you never see it frozen like that."

The Cohasset native knew most of the residents back then. It was a bedroom community, as residents rode the train into their Boston businesses.

"The huge estates," he said, "were owned by the summer people. Mrs. Parker owned the land from Otis Avenue to Government Island. She came down for ten weeks, but had two year-round men care for the property. She had horses, cows, ducks and pigs on the farmland.

"Deep Run," he recalled, "was one estate owned by the Bolles. They had about 12 helpers on the property and three year-round caretakers. All those huge homes on Jerusalem Road were summer homes. The amount of money they had to spend on those homes was quite a lot."

As a young man, Blossom tended to the 200 hens his father kept in their barn. He also learned the painting trade from his father. Aside from their animals, Blossom was responsible for keeping the coal stoves lit and tended to within their Border Street home.

His father's painting business was turned over to Bud Blossom after World War II. Today, his son, Robert, is a self-employed house painter.

"I was in business for myself for about 46 years," he said. "I still do a little now and then, but I don't go out looking for jobs. If my knees were as good as the rest of my body, I'd be doing more. But I'm 79 years old and my knees are shot. There's nothing you can do but laugh about it."

Many of his longtime friends are gone, or moved away. Blossom doesn't socialize too often. He meets acquaintances during his drives through the town.

Although the days of his youth spent playing in the wooded area known as Indian Trail are gone, Blossom is comforted by such delightful memories. Blueberry-picking in the land now known as the veteran's lot was a favorite summer pastime. Driving along in his Model T that cost him $325 brings a smile to his face.

He'll never give up the independence of living in his family's homestead. He will never be forced to reside in a senior citizen complex. "I could never go live in 'wrinkle city' and watch and wait to see when someone is going to pass out. That's not for me. I'm staying right here."

"Cohasset's still a good town to live in," he admitted. "if you can afford it. But me, I can just sit back here, look out on the water and thumb my nose at the world."

Without official support, no housing plan

By John O'Donnell
Mariner Staff

A proposal for a 24-unit condominium project on Route 3A that includes units for low income residents will be informally presented to town boards as the developer seeks to gain support for the project.

Paul Ferrini, owner of the Property Connection, a local real estate and development company, mailed his proposal to selectmen in May, but has not received encouragement from that board.

"We went to the selectmen first, and received no feedback," said Ferrini. "They seem to be unexcited.

"We thought maybe we started in the wrong place," he said. "We will have to talk informally to the water commission and the zoning board of appeals to see if there is any support for the project."

Ferrini said that if he doesn't receive any support for the proposal from the town, he will not pursue the proposal any further.

"If nobody in town wants to see this happen, it won't happen," he said. "We can't go out and spend a fortune on engineering studies without some encouragement from town boards."

The proposal calls for a 24-unit condominium project to be built on a 5.8 acre parcel on Route 3A near Evergreen Lane, adjacent to property proposed for the construction of a new Super Stop and Shop.

The Property Connection has a purchase and sale agreement with the owner of the parcel. Under terms of the agreement, the parcel will not be offered for public sale unless the housing project fails to be built.

Ferrini said that six of the 24 condominium units would be designated as low income housing. There will be four buildings with six units in each building. The low income units would be spread among the four buildings.

"The low income units would not all be in the same building," said Ferrini. "Nobody would have to know which units were for low income residents."

Ferrini said that the project will help the town meet state guidelines for low income housing. The state Executive Office of Communities and Development has warned the town that state funding for the town's proposed sewer plan could be withheld if plans for low income housing aren't developed.

Before the project can be constructed, it is necessary for the developer to receive a waiver of the town's building moratorium. Also, the parcel of land for the project contains some wetlands.

"We will try to address the concerns of all town boards," said Ferrini. "If we get some cooperation and encouragement for the project, then it's worth trying to meet the town's concerns.

"We have to find a base of support for the proposal before we have expensive plans and studies done," said Ferrini. "We've got to get some positive feedback before we go on."

The project's Route 3A location was selected because a Mariner survey indicated that residents prefer a 3A location for low income housing, Ferrini said.

The buildings will feature a "contemporized Victorian/colonial design," according to the proposal. Ferrini said that he would be committed to a high quality design.

"We're not going to create something that's a slum," said Ferrini. "We're not in it to create schlock housing.

"This is going to be a first class project," he said. "We're going to do this right, or not at all."

Ferrini said he plans to meet informally with town boards to determine if there is support for the project. "We're just taking it one day at a time at this point," he said.

scuffed ball for our lad to throw against the opposition's batters."

As a result of his relationship with Fenway's famous, the Major League Baseball Hall of Fame last year asked Clark to contribute features on six Red Sox superstars for the first Baseball Biographical Dictionary.

The book, due out in a few months, will include Clark's biographies on: Cy Young; Tris Speaker; Smoky Joe Wood; Harry Hooper; Lefty Grove and Joe Cronin.

He explained, while he knew each hero intimately through correspondence, "I had to find out a lot of tough things. For example, the names of the father and mother and what their occupations were."

He added, "I had to use my own judgement on what each player contributed to the progress and development of professional baseball."

Of all Clark's fellow correspondents there was one favorite.

"He's a person that many people, especially the younger ones regard as obscure. Harry Hooper.

"He's the only Boston player that played on four champion teams," Clark explained. "He played for the Red Sox from 1909, when I was born, through the 1920 season.

"He's the most remarkable ballplayer I've ever met, for a number of reasons," he said. "Not only was he a great defensive player, but a wonderful lead-off hitter. He leads the club even now in stolen bases.

"As captain of the team," Clark added, "everyone respected and admired him and he was that same way in later life. He was like a second father to me."

He got a chance to help his "second father" into the hall of fame.

"I got in his good graces a good many years ago," Clark said, "when his son made a tremendous effort to get him elected to the hall of fame; I looked up, and sent to the election committee, the statistics on the immortal outfield.

"With Duffy Lewis in left, Tris Speaker in center and Harry Hooper in right field, the Red Sox had the finest defensive outfield in the history of major league baseball. That didn't do him any harm."

Clark added, "I wrote to two or three of the committee members and lo and behold, he got elected in his lifetime, which was great because so many of them are gone by the time they make it. And I was tickled; I got an added in with Harry."

The longtime Red Sox fan added he has reason to be excited this year.

"The Red Sox right now are second in pitching and third in hitting," he said. "In 1912 when they won it and in 1915, when they came up again, they were second in pitching and second in batting, so they had the solid part.

"But they also had the winning spirit and the dedication," he said.

Clark said he sees sparks of the same fire burning in some present Red Sox eyes.

"I'm a great admirer of Bob Stanley," he said. "I think he's going to have a good year. And I'd pay attention to his prediction of about three months ago."

He recalled, "Stanley said, 'I'm tired of having the boo-boo people get after me when I come in from the bullpen. The boos will stop when I clinch the playoff pennant game this fall.'"

Clark, who said he remains "cautiously optimistic" remarked, "We shall see... But I like his spirit."

Troop 28 north of the border

Troop 28 Scouts went on a trip to Niagara Falls, NY and Canada and Toronto Canada June 22-27. The scouts included: Stephen Almeida, Bill Anstead, Anthony Bonanno, Don Caffrey, James Cedarstrom, Dan Curtin, David Farrag, Mark Lavange, Michael and Nicholas Lelecas, Jim Long, Adam McNamara and Matt Silvia.

The adults were Assistant Scoutmaster, Norman Cedarstrom, Peter Lelecas, Lucia Bonnaro and Linda Farrag. The scouts stayed two days at the Canadian Scout District Center. They toured Niagara Falls riding in the "Main of the Mist" boat, which sailed past the cascading American Falls then right up to the heart of the thundering "Horseshoe" Canadian Falls; also went into the tunnels which led to three separate views of the falls.

They rode the outside elevator of the Skylon Tower. Fort George, which was built in 1797 was one of the tours the scouts went to: they were lucky to see the ship traveling in the Welland Locks, which provides passage for the cargo ships between Lake Erie and Ontario.

The scouts camped at the Woodland Trails Camp while in Toronto. (It was 40 miles north of Toronto). They went to the C-N Tower, which is the tallest (553.3 meters) free standing structure in the world. The day they visited it was the 10th Anniversary celebration.

The metro zoo had many animals to see. A monorail took the troup around to see the animals in their natural habitats. The favorite part of the trip was Ontario Place. It was a fun area of water slides, bumper boats, remote control boats, paddle boats as well as an amphitheater for concerts.

The scouts met some Canadian scouts who came to wish Jim Cedarstrom and Stephen Almeida a happy "Canadian" birthday. Everyone had a very enjoyable time.

Troop 28 is goingto make Pat Hudson and Robert Carlaw of the Canadian Scout District Executive honorary members of Troop 28 for all the kindness, helpfulness, and good will they gave to the scouts. (Incidently to our surprise Pat Hudson's cousin is from Cohasset—Karen Corcoran, so Pat was very familiar with our town. It sure is a small world!)

Three Troop 28 Scouts are working on their individual Eagle Projects. Michael and Nicholas Lelecas are marking trails and cleaning the pond in Wheelright Park. Mark Lavange is doing a survey emergency card system for the Cohasset Fire Dept. This will give information regarding any person who may be an invalid, any children, etc., as to where their room would be located so quicker access to them can be provided in case of emergency. Andrew Dixson, a scout from Hanover, is doing his eagle project for Cohasset. He will be building an office and storage area at the recycling section at the Cohasset dump. Camp Algonquin in Boxford will begin July 20-26. All scouts attending must have their medical certificate signed by a doctor and bring it to camp July 20.

The Court of Honor was held July 7. Those scouts who received their communication skill award are: Don Caffrey, Jim Long, Matt Silvia, John Maciel and Jim Cederstrom. The Family Living Skill award was earned by Dan Curtin and John Maciel. The Citizenship skill award was earned by Dan Curtin. David Farrag earnerd is Safety Merit Badge.

Those scouts who stepped up in rank are: Tenderfoot: Dan Curtin and Adam McNamara; First Class: Matt Silvia, assistant patrol leader; Star: David Farrag

The next committee meeting will be held August 3 at 7:30p.m. at Jane Long's, 283 Cedar St.

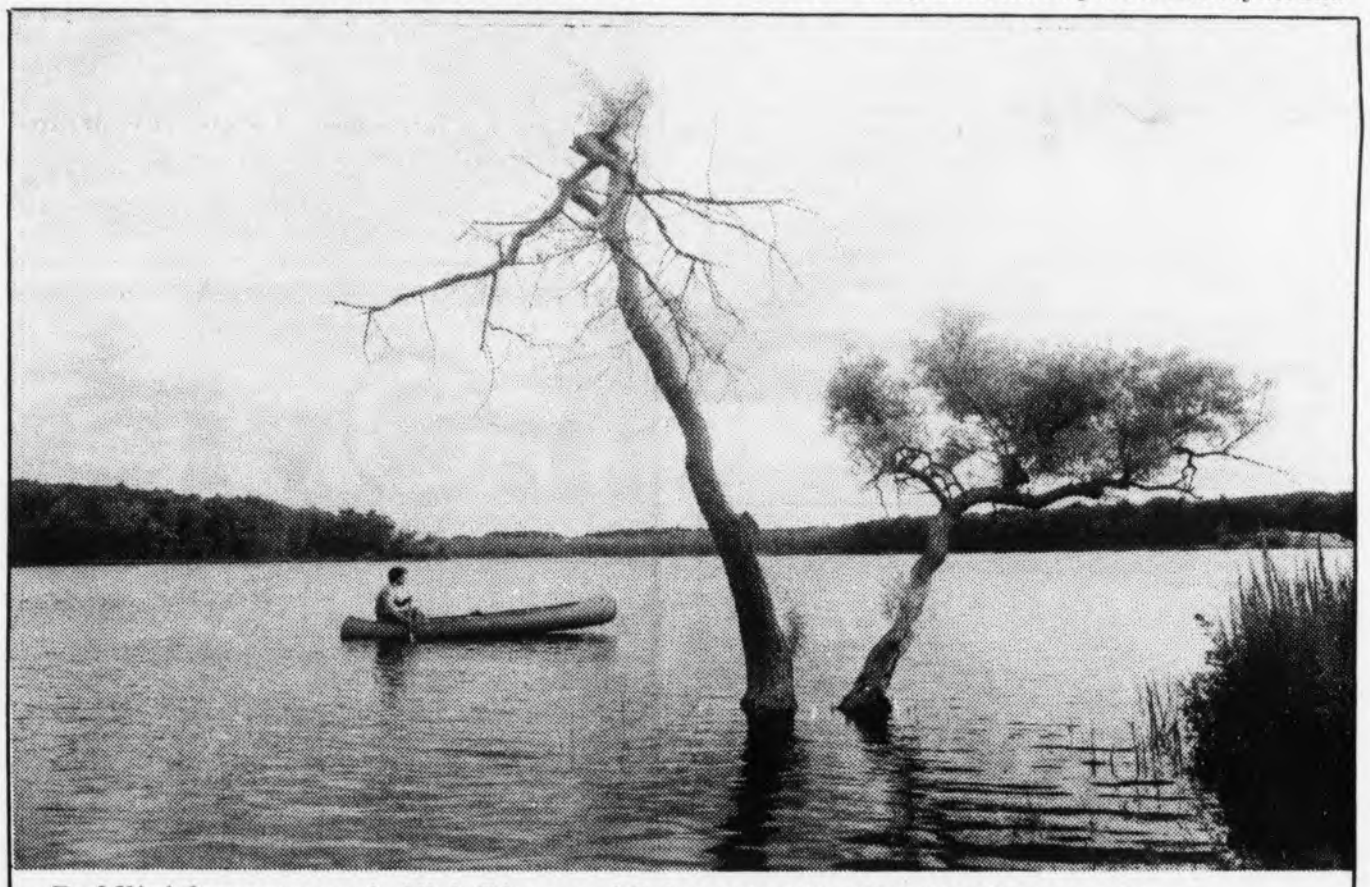
Explorer Scouts Post 28

John Pape attended The Explorer Regional Conference in Washington DC. He was the Old Colony Council delegate.

The Explorers went on a canoe trip on Lily Pond.

Cub Scouts Pack 38

The Cubs will be going on a whale watch July 13 on Sunday at 2:30p.m. on the Cap't. John at Plymouth.



Paddlin' downstream is Nick Dinaro of Cohasset at the Lily Pond reservoir.

Through the garden gate

Wednesday, July 16 from 9:30 a.m. to 3 p.m., the South Shore Natural Science Center presents "Through the Garden Gate"—a tour of seven outstanding gardens in Cohasset, Scituate, Norwell, Pembroke and Hanover.

In Cohasset, discover the exquisite, lavender-scented garden at the home of Mrs. L. Warren. Exotic plants, rare shrubs and trees, reflecting the owner's long association with Arnold Arboretum, enhance the grounds.

At the home of Mrs. B. Lombard in Scituate, delight in a chorus of color in this gorgeous floral garden. Massed in drifts and coordinated by hue, the flowers are complimented by a variety of shrubs and trees and by a charming fish pond.

A beautifully landscaped 20 acre Arabian horse farm awaits you in Norwell at the home of Mr. and Mrs. G. Whittaker. Wander through rock gardens, rose and vegetable gardens and informal flower beds. Enjoy the goldfish pool and stocked wildlife pond,, and take a peek at the brood mares with their spring foals!

The beautiful 18th century home of Mr. and Mrs. A. Gordon in Norwell features gardens with many attractions including a very unusual fringe tree. Passing between colorful perennial beds, enter the colonial herb garden, designed around a sundial and framed by hedges of lilac, hemlock and yew.

The Hanover home of Mrs. R. Gullickson features a lovely pool area. Brick paths wind through a wisteria arbor, past a small waterfall to the brick surrounding the pool.

Tiny flowers appear between the more than 20,000 bricks. Unusual trees, evergreens and fruit trees form the background for the gardens of annuals, perennials and vegetables.

At Ferndale Farm in Pembroke, home of Mr. & Mrs. William Oshima, enter an enchanted world of fragrance, color and texture. One hundred and 50 herb varieties have been selected, cultivated and grouped for specific uses: culinary, fragrance, dyeing, dried arrangements, bee attraction and wildflowers.

Included in the price of your ticket is a light lunch at the Natural Science Center on Jacobs Lane in Norwell. Here, one can enjoy the unusual "weed" garden and charming herb garden as well as the perennials along the front and side of the building.

"Through the Garden Gate" will delight future, neophyte and experienced gardeners! Ticket price: $8; advance sale $7. Tickets are available at the Science Center or at any of the gardens, including the Center, on the day of the tour.

Family story hours

"Family Story Hour" has become a popular summer tradition at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library.

Guest storytellers from the New England area will once again present a series of evening programs for family enjoyment.

The Children's Room will offer these story hours Monday, beginning July 14 at 7:30 pm. for elementary school-age children and their parents.

Rocky Weaver, children's literature/program specialist from the Boston Public Library, will be the first guest story teller. Her program will include "The Seventh Princess"' by Eleanor Farjeon as well as "The Loudest Noise in the World' by Benjamin Elkin. The program will last about 45 minutes.

Weaver first became interested in storytelling as a librarian in Philadelphia. She is presently planning a series of outdoor stories in the courtyard at Boston Public Library for July and August.

Summer reading program

The summer reading enrichment program at the Paul Pratt Library has as its theme "D.E.A.R." or, Drop Everything and Read! The program will continue through Aug. 16.

"D.E.A.R.s" will receive a personalized streamer on a wind sock, hearts on their streamers for every five books read and gift paperback books for reading to their goal which is 20 books for grades 1-3, 15 books for grades 4-6 and 10 books for readers grade 7 and up. Participants are asked to read books on their appropriate reading level and cards for listing the titles read are available in the Children's Room.

A TRS-80 computer has been loaned to the library by the Cohasset School Department and readers are invited to log their titles into the computer and to take home a computer printout. Also available are several computer educational games.

Church news

Rev. Maheras guest chaplain

Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray recently extended a personal invitation to the clergy in her district to be guest chaplains of the state House of Representatives.

The guest chaplain offers the opening prayer at the beginning of a formal session.

Prayer was recently offered by the Rev. John G.Maheras, pastor of the Church of the Virgin Mary, a Greek Orthodox church in Cohasset.

Rep. Murray of Cohasset then moved that the prayer be spread upon the records of the House; and the motion prevailed.

At the request of the Speaker, the members, guests and employees joined with him in reciting the pledge of allegiance to the flag.

To John W. Hobbs of Sandwich in the County of Barnstable, Braintree Savings Bank of Braintree in the County of Norfolk, and to all other persons interested.

A petition has been presented to said Court by Roella T. Hobbs of Cohasset in the County, of Norfolk representing that she holds as tenant in common an undivided part or share of certain land lying in Cohasset in said County and briefly described as follows:

Parcel 1: NORTHWESTERLY: by STATION STREET, 82.12 feet; NORTHERLY: by a curve at the junction of STATION STREET and SOUTH MAIN STREET, 16.09 feet; NORTHEASTERLY: by SOUTH MAIN STREET, 61.74 feet; SOUTHWESTERLY: by the second parcel, hereinafter described, 71.79 feet. Said land is shown on a "Plan of Land in Cohasset, Mass. March 15, 1923..." RECORDED WITH NORFOLK DEEDS as No. 1923-148, in BOOK 1551, PAGE 104. Said parcel containing 6,500 square feet, more or less.

Parcel 2: The full one hundred percent interest of the deceased in a second parcel of land situated in Cohasset, Norfolk County, of which parcel the deceased was the sole owner at the time of her decease, bounded and described as follows: NORTHWESTERLY: by STATION STREET, 10.00 feet; NORTHEASTERLY: by the first parcel hereinbefore described, 71.79 feet; SOUTHEASTERLY: by land now or formerly of Catherine L. St. John, 10.00 feet; and SOUTHWESTERLY: by land formerly of Grace M. Tilden, 71.79. Containing 700 square feet, more or less, Said second parcel is likewise shown on a "Plan of Land in Cohasset, Mass; March 15, 1923...", recorded with NORFOLK DEEDS as No. 1923-148, in Book 1551 Page 104 setting forth that she desires that — all — of said land may be sold at private sale for not less than six hundred thousand dollars and praying that partition may be made of all the land aforesaid according to law, and to that end that a commissioner be appointed to make such partition and be ordered to make sale and conveyance of all, or any part of said land which the Court finds cannot be advantageously divided, either at private sale or public auction, and be ordered to distribute the net proceeds thereof.

If you desire to object thereto, you or your attorney should file a written appearance in said Court at Dedham before ten o'clock in the forenoon on the sixth day of August 1986, the return day of this citation.

Witness, ROBERT M. FORD, Esquire, First Justice of said Court, this twenty-fourth day of June 1986.

"MATCH 'N WIN" Rosie*/24 SWEEP STAKES

Over 1500 Prizes Available!

NOW THRU SEPTEMBER 15th

Rockland Trust Company announces a Summer-long fun sweepstakes.
You could win a terrific prize ... such as a TV, Microwave, VCR or Travel Kit!

It's easy to play ...

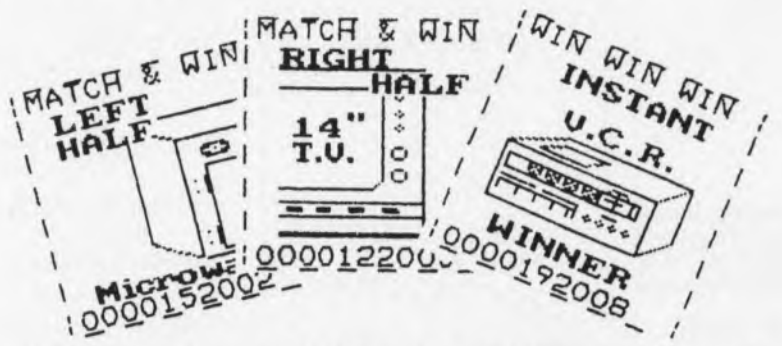
Just use your Rosie/24 Card and check the back of your receipt. It will show a picture of half a prize. Save it and match it with another card showing the other half of the prize ... and it's yours. You may even get an "Instant Winner" receipt showing the whole prize, so you don't even have to look for the other half!

Claim your prize at any Rockland Trust office. Come and join the fun this Summer. You can win as many prizes as your luck allows.

- MAGNAVOX 14" SQUARE COLOR TV with remote control included
- TOSHIBA V.C.R.
- LITTON MICROWAVE OVEN
- TRAVEL KITS for men & women

If all prizes are claimed, about 70 major prizes and 1500 Travel Kits will be awarded.

3 WAYS TO WIN ...



1. Use your Rosie/24 Card for any transaction (from a request for account balance to a cash withdrawal or a transfer). Save your receipts each time.
2. If you don't have a Rosie/24 Card, simply apply for one at any Rockland Trust office. You'll be given a "bonus receipt" to get you started and you can begin to play as soon as you get your card.
3. You may ask for a Rosie/24 Demonstration at any office and receive a "bonus receipt".

For a complete set of sweepstakes rules, ask at any Rockland Trust office or write: Marketing Department, Rockland Trust Company, 288 Union Street, Rockland, MA 02370.

Anyone wishing to play "Match 'N Win" without using a Rosie/24 Card may receive a randomly selected Receipt by sending a pre-addressed, stamped envelope to Rockland Trust at the address above.

It is the intention of Rockland Trust to award as many prizes as possible. However, if all prizes are not claimed by the deadline, those left cannot be awarded.

Art Center launches drive to finance location

Just a week after celebrating its annual summer festival, the South Shore Art Center is beginning a major capital fund drive to finance its new Cohasset Village location.

A goal of $950,000 has been established for the construction of a two and a half-story, 8,000 square foot art center. Just last June, the center announced the purchase of the Tantillo Auto Body shop at 115 Ripley Road. Throughout the past year, plans for the new center have been reviewed and approved by the necessary town and state boards.

The art center has been at its current location, 103 Ripley Road, for the past 30 years. The new center will accommodate more classrooms, more studios, and more students.

To date, the center has raised $500,000 toward its final goal. Current plans call for construction to be completed in 1987.

Prior to the capital fundraiser, the center proceeded through the necessary reviews before the zoning board of appeals and the sewer commission. The appeals board granted a special permit, and the commission approved connection of the new center to the town's sewer system.

After an initial denial and a long appeal, the center also won approval from the state Division of Water Pollution Control to hook into the town's sewer system.

The new art center is to be located on Pleasant Street, just around the corner from its current Ripley Road site. Architectural renderings call for a new building that expands the auto body shop into a two and a half level building.

Increased enrollment and participation in the center's workshops and classes emphasized the need for an expanded facility. The little red building with the uneven floors across the street from the Cohasset Post Office, no longer met the demands of its students.

The growth of the center during the past 30 years has paralled the population boom along the South Shore. In keeping with the cultural needs of the area, the center's new facility will more adequately meet the educational and artistic needs of the communities it serves. Residents from Hingham, Norwell, Scituate, Hanover, Hull, Weymouth, and Braintree attend classes and seminars at the local center.

According to plans developed by Hingham architect Vecvold Strekalovsky, the new art center will include four large studio/classrooms with better teaching facilities, a central two-story gallery space with professional exhibit lighting, a gallery/members room for community functions, an expanded gift shop to provide a professional outlet for local artists and craftspeople, more storage space and improved administrative offices. The new building will double the center's current floor space and will continue to be easily accessible to all the South Shore communities now serviced by the center.

Mrs. William Vanderweil discusses the South Shore Art Center building plans with the Center's architect, Vcevold Strekalovsky at a presentation of the plan in Mrs. Vanderweil's home.

The center has become recognized as a major educational art facility for students who wish to learn a new skill or to improve their already-discovered artistic ability. It is also well known as a gallery that attracts professional artists from all over New England.

It has become a major influence on the growth of cultural opportunities on the South Shore, and has taken a leadership role in making the arts more accessible to all the communities. Recently through a major grant, the center developed a program of children's classes and workshops which meet at locations in Norwell, Cohasset and in Hingham.

The programming of its adult and young artist courses attempts to anticipate the interest and desires of its students. New course ideas are always being added to the class schedule.

Students come to the center to take classes in painting, drawing, photography, pottery, design, landscape design, decorative arts, art history, or to participate in numerous workshops throughout the year.

Instruction is offered for beginner through advanced students as well as for the professional artist.

As a recognized gallery, the center offers art patrons an opportunity to see the quality of work begin done by artists of the South Shore and New England area. These same exhibits give artists the kind of exposure necessary for their professional growth. They are also useful as a common ground for meeting fellow artists and art patrons.

The center has demonstrated that art is everywhere. Through its varied class schedule, the center has shown that interests in art can focus on Oriental rug collecting, landscape design or interior design. As a facility for artistic expression and a center for diverse activity, the art center is known as a kaleidoscope of activities for all ages and levels of ability.

The capital fundraising campaign will depend on the supportive partnership of individuals, businesses and corporations to meet its $950,000 goal. The center is confident of reaching that goal, and completing the new facility in 1987.

Alcohol conundrum, I: The "alcohol-free weekend"

Sometimes in this space I discuss an issue involving a particular community in the hope that the general reader will be able to extrapolate to his own community. The two-part series herewith commencing concerns Duxbury and alcohol.

Selectmen in Duxbury recently approved a non-binding "alcohol-free weekend" on July 12 and 13. Citizens of the town are being asked to abstain from alcohol those days; restaurants and package stores are being urged to peddle only non-alcoholic drinks.

The intent of the sponsors of non-alcoholic events such as this — Scituate had one in 1985 — is to call attention to the alcohol problem in its many facets and to begin to practice, with the small gesture of the alcohol-free weekend, responsible behavior. In Duxbury's case the proposal originated in the high school and sprang from the special anguish students there feel after seeing several of their finest fellow students killed in alcohol-related accidents during the last two years.

It is hard to think of any proposal more honorable in its intent or more inspiring in what it says about the young sponsors, particularly about Douglas Fultz, the Duxbury High '86 scholar and athlete who made the proposal and has led the implementation. In so doing he has had much support but has also faced evasiveness and hostility from both adolescents and adults.

Douglas and the others are trying to demonstrate to their contemporaries that a weekend can be enjoyed without getting drunk. In that they deserve both the support and the emulation of the adult world. Secondly, in calling on adults to participate in the alcohol-free weekend, they are acknowledging what they probably see more clearly than the rest of us do: that heavy-drinking teenagers tend to come from heavy-drinking families. As the psychoanalyst Theodor Reik observed, "Children do as their parents do, not as they say."

The effort of these students is already a success in that it has folks in Duxbury thinking about the role of alcohol in their lives and discussing it out loud. Their effort does much to refute the bad press that a small town like Duxbury gets when trouble occurs. Duxbury, like the South Shore generally but more so, is, through envy and ignorance, erroneously seen to be a den of privilege. Being a small town, when trouble comes it tends to be seen as a reflection on the town as a whole.

This is very unfair and seldom happens in the great amorphous megalopolis. At this writing I have a young friend lying brain-dead in a Boston hospital after hitting a tree in Jamaica Plain going 80. Yet no one will consider this tragic demise as a reflection on Boston. Perhaps they should but they won't. But they have used Duxbury's recent anguish to make shallow judgements, and one hopes at the very least that the effort to organize an alcohol-free weekend will show that there is character and leadership as well as problems among Duxbury's young.

Nevertheless, I have to say that as an idea that seems to be turning into a trend in dealing with the alcohol conundrum, the "alcohol-free weekend" is a concept I do not agree with. I've two reasons. The first is that as a measure in dealing with the abuse of alcohol, trying to get the general public to go dry for a couple of days is an illusion and is therefore ineffective.

The illusion involved is related to what in psychology is called projection. Put simply, the illusion is that "if I get my neighbor to stop drinking I thereby control my own drinking." That is false, and equally so is its transposition in the sentence: "If I stop drinking I thereby control my neighbor's drinking." The underlying falsehood to both statements is the assumption: "I and my neighbor are the same; our response to alcohol is the same."

The truth, as wiser men than I have come to understand it, is that every person who takes a drink must answer for himself: "Who is the boss here? Am I the boss or is alcohol the boss? For the majority of us — the great majority — who are ourselves "the boss" in this matter, and who can take a drink in safety, what we need to worry about is not alcohol per se, but that two-ton piece of twentieth century machinery, the automobile. If we drink and drive we deserve the panoply of punishments with which an increasingly irate society responds to the criminally foolish.

But for the approximately ten percent minority who sooner or later must answer that alcohol, not they, is the boss in their lives, the torment of alcohol and the recovery from it is, and will always be, a personal struggle in which neither the penalties of law nor the exhortations of well-meaning friends have much relevance. The alcoholic can perhaps and in some instances be brought to deciding to save himself through the intervention of family, friends, or professionals. But he will never be reached by a publicity campaign such as the "alcohol-free weekend."

Among teenagers the publicity campaign is justified if it creates countervailing peer pressure, if it educates a few kids in the possibilities of mixing sobriety and fun, and above all if it prevents a single kid from getting into a death car. But in terms of dealing with the young or old alcohol abuser the publicity campaign is an exercise by those who may or may not need help and whose only palpable effect will be on the behavior of those who do not need help. How many habitual drinkers are likely to abstain in Duxbury this coming weekend? Sadly, I would wager none; and alcohol abuse, I would argue, is too serious a problem to be handled with tactics that don't work.

Invasion of Privacy

The second reason I disagree with the alcohol-free weekend as a trend in fighting alcohol abuse is that it is an invasion of privacy. It is a peek behind the curtains in the home that is, as in ancient English Common Law, a man's castle. It is a violation of the old, healthy Yankee notion of "mind your own business."

The majority of us who do not have either a drinking problem or a drinking and driving problem are asked to modify our private behavior on account of those who are a menace to themselves and society. People running responsible businesses (for instance the Winsor House and the Milepost in Duxbury) are asked to take a loss because, as the Weymouth News and the Braintree Forum proved in their investigation of package stores in 1985, there are numerous liquor outlets in our towns that show no compunction about selling booze to minors.

If the logic of this invasion of privacy shall prevail, if public opinion shall be marshalled to modify our private behavior behind closed doors, and if the privacy of our homes shall be equally subject to the scrutiny of the community as our behavior in the town square, shall the logic not be extended to other social problems? Would it not be just as logical to demand that those living in monogomous relationships refrain from intimacies for a weekend in order to demonstrate their solidarity with those suffering from sexually transmitted diseases?

That may be a bit far-fetched, but in principle it makes as much sense as dealing with alcohol abuse, or with teen-age alcohol abuse, by asking moderate social drinkers to lock their liquor cabinets for a weekend. Behavior "in the town square," which includes public drinking and surely includes drinking and driving, is obviously the legitimate concern of the community. But the private behavior of our adult fellow citizens, which I believe includes the taking of a drink in a legal tavern, is none of any other citizen's business — not even in Duxbury's present anguish.

Public opinion in a small town is a powerful thing and can turn tyrannical and hysterical even in a free society, even in a community with an upstanding population such as Duxbury's. That, I think, is why the Yankees who farmed these southeastern Massachusetts lands long before we suburbanized them placed so very much importance on respecting the property line, the fence, the shutter, and the drawn curtain. I believe such folk, who did not regard noseyness fondly, would regard an alcohol-free weekend campaign as a form of trespass...and I believe they would be right.

In discussing the alcohol-free weekend with Douglas Fultz for over an hour and having expressed to him my reasons for having reservations about it, he finally put the relevant question to me: "What would you do about the problem?" Next week a fellow who spent his teenage years in Duxbury, who took his first drink at the old Duxbury Days Fourth of July celebration, will try to give this fine young man a decent answer to his good, tough question.

FROM THE KITCHEN

by JOAN PINKHAM

'Crowd pleasers' from Borrowed Butler catering service

The trick is to get in and out of the kitchen as quickly as possible these fleeting summer days. That's where the Borrowed Butler can be of help. If you'd rather be on your boat, the beach, or in your own backyard, this four-year-old catering service now offers new ways of taking you out of the kitchen.

Now, after repeated requests by their customers, Carole McManus and her staff have expanded their many services by opening a new store. Each day they offer oven ready, table ready, old or new, ethnic or traditional foods at their new shop in Library Plaza in Marshfield.

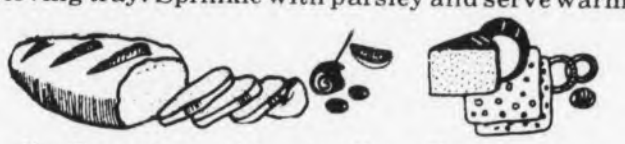
White-washed walls decorated with pottery and baskets from Puerto Rico reflect the ambiance of the island where Carole and her family owned a restaurant for 10 years. The smell of freshly baked bread is in the air, mingled with the aroma of foods prepared daily in their new kitchen in the rear.

You'll also see copies of the Doric Dames' cookbook reviewed in this column last week and on sale at the Borrowed Butler. Featured in the chapter called "Crowd Pleasers" are several recipes from the Borrowed Butler which they prepared for a reception for a U.S. Senator. Here is their recipe, part of the finger food served to 50 guests, called

MINI REUBENS

50 slices of cocktail rye bread
1 1/2 lbs. ea. corned beef and sliced Swiss cheese
1 lg. can sauerkraut
2 c. Russian dressing

Divide dressing equally with a spoon between all bread slices. Spread slightly and top with drained sauerkraut dividing equally between dressed slices. With sharp knife divide cheese and corned beef to obtain 50 slices. Top sauerkraut with corned beef dividing equally and then with cheese. Broil in oven 2 to 3 min., or until cheese is melted. Remove to serving tray. Sprinkle with parsley and serve warm.



Jim Breen has written to tell us of how he spent "a rotten, rainy day." He and his dog, Ginger, drove down to Angelo's and spent a small fortune on ingredients to add to Reanne Rosenhahn's recipe for "Reducing Soup" which we printed earlier. Soon the smell of simmering soup with dry mustard, garlic powder, tabasco and soy sauces and bay leaf added was drifting from his kitchen, so he promised his neighbor a bowl to brighten up her day. An oven dinner is always welcome when we have a n'easter as we did last week, so here is

Break a head of cauliflower into florets and steam 'til just tender. Arrange on a broiler pan and brush them generously with melted butter. Top with a thick layer of grated parmesan cheese and generous dusting of paprika. Broil until the cheese bubbles and begins to brown. Serve right away.

A pleasant way to start a leisurely day is with a sumptuous breakfast. Just hearing Pat Smith tell of how she makes hot muffins for breakfast and her little audience at garden club drooling. Ever thoughtful of our readers, you can see I lost no time in asking for her recipe for

BRAN MUFFINS

1 egg
1/4 c. prune juice
1/3 c. honey
2 c. bran
1 c. flour
1 1/2 tsp. baking soda
1/3 c. melted margarine, cool not hot
2 T molasses
1/4 c. wheat germ
1/2 c. raisins
1/2 tsp. salt
1 c. milk

Combine bran and milk in large mixing bowl. Stir and let stand 1 to 2 min. Add egg, prune juice, honey and margarine. Beat well. Stir flour, wheat germ, soda and salt together. Add to above mixture. Fold in raisins. Spoon into 12 greased muffin cups. Bake at 400 degrees for 18-20 min.

NOTE: Pat writes: "I have found that substituting cranberry juice for prune juice works very well. I also omit wheat germ if what I have on hand is all gone. Also, omitting the salt doesn't seem to be at all noticed."

The Cambridge Buskers

Prelude Concert features Cambridge Buskers

The second concert of the Prelude Concert Series fifth anniversary season, featuring the Cambridge Buskers, will be presented on Saturday, July 19, at 8 p.m. at the Scituate Town Library.

Tickets for the concert, which is funded in part by a grant from Webb-Norfolk Conveyor, are $10, and may be reserved in advance by calling 545-0238, or purchased at the door the evening of the performance.

There is no simple way to describe the Cambridge Buskers, "an improbable wind and accordion duo" (Los Angeles Times), whose concert appearances span four continents and whose recordings on Deutsche Grammophon have consistently been at the top of the classical charts.

From street corners to symphony halls, the Cambridge Buskers have been hailed as "charming, clever and sensitive musicians." With David Ingram on piano-accordion and Michael Copley on an endless array of recorders, flutes and a duck in Ab, they call themselves buskers, and yet perform with the scintillating technique, the impecceable sense of ensemble, the inspired phrasing which one expects only of one of the world's leading chamber groups." (Adelaide, Australia).

They are defined by musical experts as: "Cambridge Buskers, proper noun, plural. Two young English gents. Met at Cambridge University. Virtuoso musicians on accordion plus 20 other wind instruments. Started working the streets, now give successful concerts in major halls everywhere. Do some nutty things on stage such as last movement from Beethoven's Ninth Symphony arranged for penny whistle and accordion. Pull it off brilliantly. Perform as serious guest soloists with important orchestras. Regularly tour the world. Have fan club in Japan. Sell very many records in North America and elsewhere on Deutsche Grammophon. Rumored to be one of DG's top selling artists. See also: 'Hot Act.'"

An evening with the Cambridge Buskers promises to mingle wit with amazing musical expertise, a varied repertoire, and a few unsuspected, hilarious surprises.

Future concerts in Prelude's Fifth Season include The Orford String Quartet, with James Campbell, clarinet, on Oct. 25, and Trio Sonato on Jan. 24, 1987. For further information, call 545-0238, or write to Prelude, Box 109, North Scituate, MA 02060.

Brockton Hospital awarded Certificate of Accreditation

Brockton Hospital has been awarded a Certificate of Accreditation by the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals (JCAH).

"It is a direct reflection of the outstandingstaff here at Brockton Hospital that we have received this accreditation," said Wayne M. Henry, President of Brockton Hospital.

To become accredited, Brockton Hospital voluntarily requested an on-site evaluation by JCAH surveyors who applied standards designed to further the objectives of quality patient care and the safety of the environment in which that care is provided. These national standards represent a consensus among health care professionals and are periodically updated to reflect changes in health care delivery.

The JCAH survey team consists of health care professionals trained to evaluate the hospital's efforts to provide quality care. The surveyors also consult with the professional and administrative staffs to help them in their efforts to continually improve patient care.

The JCAH hospital accreditation surveys are conducted by a team that includes a physician, a registered nurse, a hospital administrator and a medical technologist. Each team is selected for its expertise in the types of services provided by the hospital.

Brockton Hospital is a 301-bed, private and not-for-profit facility located at 680 Centre Street in Brockton. The hospital was founded in 1896.

The Dragon's Dungeon — By Claire McDonough

The Stars and Stripes as seen by Madam Zolar

You've been moved by the Fourth of July, right? The re-dedication of the Lady has left you all misty-eyed and patriotic, right? I thought so.

So I bugalood over to Madam Zolar's chic little ashram on Third Cliff and asked her for a guide to patriotism for the various astrological signs. "How, for example," I asked "can an Aries best serve our nation?" When I finally got her to stop laughing, Madam held out her palm for some coin of the realm, then proffered the following advice.

ARIES (March 21 - April 20): Aries, as we all know, love telling other people what to do. They are also great at starting projects, then abandoning them.

A position on the Nuclear Regulatory Commission would appear to be tailor-made for your skills. You can think up some really neat rules for nuclear power plants, with the vague hope that some day, somewhere, someone else will enforce them.

TAURUS (April 21 - May 21): Taurus natives are great at holding on to their valued possessions and getting rid of things they don't want, a skill that can hardly be diverted to patriotic purposes. Taurean James Monroe, for example, warned the rest of the world to keep its hands off our continent.

The U.S. Department of Commerce can definitely use your skills to straighten out the balance of trade deficit. Could you, for example, talk some emerging nation into purchasing our hazardous wastes?

GEMINI (May 22 - June 21): Geminis tend to change their minds more easily than New England changes it weather—a flexibility that won Benedict Arnold an undying position in American history.

Surely there is a place for you on some congressional sub-committee.

CANCER (June 22 - July 23): Born officially on July 4, 1776, the United States herself is a Cancer. Because even astrologers get patriotic and sentimental, we can't bring ourselves to say anything snarky to you this time. You have a proud history and a glorious future—happy birthday!

LEO (July 24 - Aug. 23): Leos are marvelous at making rules for everyone else, then declaring themselves above rules. May we humbly suggest that there may be an opening for you working for the Department of Defense?

VIRGO (Aug. 24 - Sept. 23): Incredibly organized and neat themselves, Virgos excel at making everyone else feel guilty and uneasy at all times, then stepping in and cleaning up other people's messes.

If you haven't already found your vocation as a mother, the EPA needs all the Virgos they can get.

LIBRA (Sept. 24 - Oct. 23): Like the scales of justice that symbolize your zodiacal placement you first tilt one way, then the other. You feel the government should not interfere with the privacy of one's home. Unless there are compelling reasons.

Like maybe if it's a Thursday. Or perhaps not. Then on the other hand . . . You may have a glorious future on the United States Supreme Court.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24 - Nov. 22): Mysterious, illusive Scorpio! You baffle, confuse, and mystify everyone with whom you have contact. Surely no one but a Scorp can effectively design income tax forms.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23 - Dec. 21): Sagittarians have a magnificant disregard for detail. Because you focus only on the big picture, you ignore income tax forms, and simply send the federal government the amount you feel you can spare and they deserve.

This tactic confuses even Scorpios, and keeps many federal accountants employed—a truly patriotic service.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 - Jan. 20): Madam Zolar did not wish to go on record as saying that Capricorns tend to equate patriotism with their own personal ambitions. She did, however, send her very best wishes to prominent Capricorn Richard Milhouse Nixon.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 - Feb. 19): Like Aquarian Aaron Burr, you tend to feel you can best serve your country by performing zany, unpredictable feats like challenging the Secretary of the Treasury to a duel.

If you can't avoid calling the attention of the local police to your patriotic endeavors, you might want to retain a Libra for your defense attorney.

PISCES (Feb. 20 - March 10): Pisces natives specialize in the dramatic but dumb gesture—e.g., who but Piscean George Washingtron would have stood up in the boat while crossing the Delaware? Or ridden to battle on a white horse, sure to attract every British marksman?

Because, to the surprise of everyone else, this tactic pays off more often than not, there's a place for you at any level of government you choose. (You're not going to catch me bad-mouthing the father of our country.)

NOTE TO ALL SIGNS: Ignore any advice you may receive from a Sun Sign astrologer, especially if she's a zany, unpredictable Aquarian. In spite of the blunders we all make, somehow the whole is greater than the sum of its parts and the United States will continue to lead the way into the 21st century.

Coat of Arms

What's in a name? Reich

By Frank Keady
Special to the Mariner

The territories in which the Reich name attained prominence, high rank and power are numerous and important to the development of early European history. FRANCONIA was a duchy of medieval Germany and furnished a dynasty of emperors . . . RATISBON, a Bavarian imperial city was the seat of the Holy Roman Empire from 1663 to 1803 . . . SWABIA was a part of the Hohenstaufen dynasty in medieval times and later led the imperial reformation in the 15th century . . . TYROL, an Austrian province in the 14th century traces its history to Roman rule.

It was in these important areas that Reich families commanded vast estates, large followings of servants and armies of knights. Reich de Panaitier, Baron Reich of Reichenstein, Reich of Platz are but a few of the dominant families which bore the name and were part of the ruling class.

There are equally as many impressive armorial bearings confirmed to noble Reichs. However, not all Reichs were as powerful and wealthy as their ancestors and namesakes. Some of the first to arrive in America were penniless, without property or belongings. Gottfried Reich sailed from the port of Rotterdam on the English ship "Pink Mary" along with 170 other passengers from the Rhine and arrived in Philadelphia in 1733. From the year 1682 up to the Revolution in 1776, Pennsylvania was the central point of emigration from Germany, France and Switzerland. So great was the influx of Germanic immigrants in the beginning of the 18th century, that it was ordered that the masters of the vessels examine whether each passenger had permission from the Court of Great Britain. Each was obliged then to sign a declaration of allegiance and subjection to the King.

As a surname, Reich is a nickname but one with highly desirable qualities. It evolved from the Middle High German word "riche" and became "reich" in modern spellings. It meant "mighty" or "powerful" and was readily adopted by those who reigned over their land.

If you would like a history of your family name and a fascimile of your COAT of ARMS, please send $3, plus self addressed envelope to IS THIS YOU, P.O. Box 807, Westwood, MA 02090.

ANGLER'S CORNER by Bill Smith

Fly fishing techniques and strategies

In a recent column, fly fishing tackle was discussed. This week's article will concentrate on fly fishing techniques and strategies.

Proper fly casting requires little more than proper timing and the coordination of the fly rod with the fly line. There are two complete motions involved in the casting techniques.

What might appear as a back and forth waving of the rod to inexperienced anglers is really a highly controlled movement of the fly rod to cast the fly line in a controlled loop.

This loop control is accomplished by beginning the cast with the rod at the 11 o'clock position and moving it steadily back to the 1 o'clock position. Once the line has straightened in the air behind the angler, the forecast is accomplished by bringing the rod back to the 11 o'clock position.

This casting sequence, commonly referred to as the 11-1 method, will allow the beginner to cast 30 to 40 feet very quickly.

One should remember to relax and to let the rod and line do their job. To accomplish the casting sequence, the beginner must constantly remind himself of rod position and watch his casting loops.

Once this elementary casting principle is learned, additional line may be pulled from the reel and through a gradual lengthening of the casting loop, it may be powered in front of the angler.

Some of the best tournament casters would never be considered accomplished anglers since they may be able to cast a fly line tremendous distances but know little about fishing strategies. Fishing the fly is as important as the casting sequence. Fly fisherman must become familiar with the presentation of the fly, water conditions, and the behavior of the fish.

First, the angler must decide what part of the water to fish. He must recognize that fish inhabit certain areas which offer protection from predators and provide environment conditions conducive to its survival.

Certain structures and depths will hold fish while other areas will be void of fish. Present your fly to fish near weed beds and rocky areas, and you will often be rewarded with a startling strike.

Next, the beginner must learn how to fish his fly. The number one fault of a beginner is too much line drag on his fly. This is especially true with dry flies. Drag causes the fly to be pulled along the surface showing that it is attached to a line.

By allowing some slack in the leader, the fly will have a natural drift. An upstream presentation, which allows the fly to float or drift, is usually most effective. However, at times, especially when fishing subsurface flies, such as nymphs and streamers, a cross-section or down-stream presentation may be effective.

As for specific fly recommendations, beginners will do best to fish darker colored flies when the water is the coldest and progressively go with lighter color flies as the water warms. Streamers which imitate small bait fish when retrieved erratically work very well in the spring when fished along the shore or trolled deep in the summer.

In recent years, I have worked nymphs which imitate immature aquatic insects on a wet tip fly line very effectively. The most fun can be had on the dry flies which imitate surface terrestrial and aquatic insects.

These flies do best during the warmer season or during the warmer part of the day. Specific recommendations for streamers would include the muddler minnow, gray ghost, black marabou, and the llama.

Nymphs which I have used successfully included the weighted black nymph, hare's ear, and a number of the may fly nymphs. Among the dry flies I prefer are the Adams, Light Cahill, Black Ant and the Light Henderson.

Young anglers make Kids' Day a success

Sunday, June 22, almost two hundred young anglers, three to 13 years old participated in Adams Bait & Tackle's first annual Kids' day.

As the youngsters fished with sights set for grand prizes, their parents were treated to hot dogs and soda supplied by Adams.

Store staff and volunteers helped the children by providing fishing instruction, distributing bait, cooking and offering encouragement.

Bill Smith, owner of Adams Bait & Tackle, also presented a rod and reel to each Wolf and Bear Scout in Pembroke's Cub Scout Pack 104.

Smith said that Adams Tackle runs a number of fishing tournaments during the year and proceeds from these events defray the costs of Adams "Teach a Kid to Fish" program.

He added "Our goal is to provide opportunities for area youths to take advantage of local outdoor activities and to learn a life long skill. What we want to do is to create a family oriented event. We have almost four hundred people here today who seem to really be enjoying themselves. The community support has been excellent and you can be sure that this will become an annual event."

Prizes were awarded to Chris Budrow for catching the largest fish. Michael Paradis of Weymouth and Bryan Smith of Pembroke tied for second place while Adam Giamarco of Plymouth and Ed Pace tied for Third Place.

Patrick Saucony was awarded the prize for the days first fish and Chris Benny took home the prize for the last fish of the day. A drawing for tackle boxes, lures, fishing hats and patches ended the days events.

State Marine Fisheries reopens bass fishery permits

Based on the preliminary results of testing for PCBs on 15 striped bass from 12 1/2 to 42 lbs caught off the Massachusetts coast, the state Division of Marine Fisheries recently determined to immediately begin issuing commercial striped bass fishery permits to fishermen.

Results of the testing conducted at the division's Cat Cove Marine Laboratory facility in Salem indicated an average level of 1.1 parts per million (ppm) in the sampling of striped bass measuring over 30 inches in length.

The sampling from the Cuttyhunk and Chatham offshore areas was subject to gas chromatography analysis using the FDA Pesticide Analytical Method.

According to division director Philip Coates, "This is well below the current federal and state action levels of 2 ppm. The lack of significant variation in the individual results lends confidence that subsequent testing which will begin shortly will confirm similar low PCB values." PCB levels in individual fish ranged from 0.36 ppm to 2.11 ppm. Only one fish sampled exceeded FDA standards.

Working closely with the state Department of Public Health, the Massachusetts Division of Marine Fisheries is satisfied that health concerns raised by the closing of Rhode Island's striped bass fishery earlier this year due to PCB levels above FDA standards are not reflected in striped bass caught in the Commonwealth's waters.

Coates noted that permits will only be renewed for fishermen who have filed 1985 catch reports. He also stated that non-resident fishermen who obtain permits must take their fish from Massachusetts waters. Anyone who takes fish from other states that are closed due to contamination and markets them in Massachusetts will be violating both state law and the federal Lacey Act which carries with it very severe penalties," he warned.

"It is our intention to continue PCB testing throughout the season to assure that public health concerns are met," Coates stated. "We will continue to maintain close contact with the Department of Public Health on this matter."

Lastly, Coates noted that in compliance with the Atlantic States Marine Fisheries Commission Interstate Striped Bass Management Plan, the 30-inch total length minimum size is in effect and will be enforced by environmental police officers from the state's Division of Law Enforcement.

Massachusetts has recently increased the minimum size for striped bass from 24 inches fork length to 30 inches total length to assist in the replenishment of striped bass numbers which have declined in recent years.

Local sculptor to design state war memorial

By Jane Lane
Mariner Staff

For a man who expresses his thoughts and emotions through his art, Dennis Kowal can be extremely articulate.

But last week, he was speechless. His singular utterance . . . "overwhelming!"

Kowall was momentarily at a loss for words last week after learning his sculpture was selected as the official state Vietnam War memorial. The Cohasset sculptor had just been informed by the Boston Vietnam Veterans Association.

The artist, who has resided in Cohasset for the past 16 years, entered the competition after reading about it in the newspapers. "It interested me," he explained this week inside the workshop of his Jerusalem Road carriage house. "I felt as if a contribution to the war was living inside of me waiting to be completed for the past 15 years."

Sculptor Dennis Kowal displays the blueprint of his work. It was selected as the state's memorial to the Vietnam War. (Alan Chapman photo)

For many years, Kowal had been conceptualizing the design of such a memorial. Sketches of a perfect memorial tribute were drawn and put aside. Although no such memorial was requested, Kowal felt an urging to continue his work.

When he became aware of the state competition, he stayed awake for 36 hours, laboring continually until a conclusion. "I felt like I was possessed," he said, recalling the first days of his work. "I had been collecting news clippings for many years, visual accounts of Vietnam and other conflicts.

"But Vietnam was special to me," he continued. "Over the years I was involved in a body of socially-conscious work. For example, one of my series of sculptures has been going on for 20 years, what I call the Ominous Ikons that deal with atomic war. Then there is the Memorial to Belsen and many other socially-conscious pieces."

After that initial 36-hour burst of creativity, Kowal settled down to a more realistic but continuous schedule of work. After hundreds of hours, he was pleased with his product.

Before word of his selection was announced, the Accreditation given; new counselor named

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

The New England Association of Secondary Schools and Colleges will continue Cohasset High School's accreditation until 1991, Supt. Eugene Crowell told the school committee Monday.

According to Assistant Supt. Stephen Hart, Cohasset High School received a 10-year accreditation from the association in 1981.

"But you have to file a progress report to them every five years," he added. "We filed that five year progress report and now our accreditation has been continued for the next five years."

He explained, when the association evaluates high schools and grants accreditations, "there are usually some things that they will continue to look at."

Accessibility to the handicapped was high on the association's list of priorities when they went to review Cohasset High School's accreditation.

Hart said, since the association's approval in 1981 when the issue was raised, ramps have been installed at two side entrances to the school, so the handicapped have access "at least to the first floor and certain areas."

Crowell told the committee, the school administration has made as much progress in dealing with the problem as possible, considering the budget constraints imposed under Proposition 2 1/2.

With the good news about accreditation in their pockets; the school committee set out to plug other leaks in the system, approving eight teaching and

Last boating season for Ritter

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

Like the rock wall that lines Border Street, Harry Ritter has been a fixture at Cohasset Harbor.

He has watched over the schooners and skippers here since he became harbormaster in 1968. But this boating season is his last.

The license plate on the front of his car reads, "I'd rather be playing golf," and after 18 years, he means it.

"It's a thankless job," he said of his post. "You do the best you can, but you can't satisfy everybody."

The biggest problem facing all harbormasters now, Ritter said, is space.

He explained, there are 350 boats moored in the harbor now and 200 more waiting to get in. The average boater has to wait four or five years before a mooring becomes available.

Furthermore, a boater is forced to "marry" his craft; any switching of boats, say to a larger sized yacht, puts him back on the waiting list.

Such rules, Ritter said, elicit a lot of squawking.

"I've enjoyed trying to help out the boat owners and keep them happy," he said. "Ninety percent of them are more than decent and fair; they appreciate what I do. But I have to keep a separate folder on 15 or 16 of them."

He said his biggest problem is people sneaking moorings in, or moving the ones they have and "crowding out the other guy."

He added, "You're damned if you do and damned if you don't; I have to go to court for their violations and then I get dragged back into court on the judgments."

Ritter explained, "I can understand when a guy works five days per week and wants to yacht on the weekend, he doesn't need someone on his back. He gets enough of that at work. I do, too.

"But the mooring regulations are strict," he added. "The moorings have to be set by the harbormaster.'

It's the harbormaster's responsibility to make sure all boats have the proper swing, so two expensive yachts won't bang into each other. With an "inventory" of 350 boats worth a total $2½ million to $3 million the task can be challenging.

Ritter said he believes that answers to some of Cohasset Harbor's problems lie in long-range planning.

Local residents await extras call

It's still a matter of "don't call us . . ."

The Casting Company, responsible for hiring the hundreds of extras to be used in "Witches of Eastwick," will not make the final decisions for at least a few days.

Carol Larkin, assistant casting director, said the primary selections of extras should be made by the end of this week. These will include the 75 or so 'core' people who will have recurring roles in the film.

"The director (George Miller) was very happy with the people we saw in Cohasset," Larkin said, recalling the massive casting call three weeks ago. "There were a lot of Cohasset and Hingham people that we will undoubtedly use in the film."

About 75 people were called back by The Casting Co. last week. At that time, the potential extra actors were asked to spend a minute or two with director Miller. It took just a few minutes for the director to chat with the locals and review their photographs.

Raquel Osborne of The Casting Company said the selection of the 'core' people should be completed by Friday. The extras will be notified by phone if they have been selected, she said.

In addition to the core group, hundreds of additional extras will be necessary for background scenes throughout the filming of "Witches."

"People should not lose hope because they haven't been called," Larkin emphasized. "If they are not chosen this week, they could be called for another scene at any time."

The assistant casting director explained the company could call a local extra the day before they are asked to appear for work. "We'll just call and ask if they're available," she stated.

None of the extras, including the core group, will

Little Harbor repairs

Residents, particularly in the area of Little Harbor, should be aware that during the period from July 21 to July 25, the gates at Cat Dam will be removed for repair.

At low tide, the lagoon and Little Harbor water level will be very low. With good weather, this project will be complete in about five days. If there is a period of rain, it will take longer.

Wastewater treatment course

Manuel Salvador Superintendent of the Cohasset Sewer Department recently completed California State University, Sacramento's national field study course on the treatment of wastewater from electroplating, metal finishing and printed circuit board manufacturing.

California State University, Sacramento, California, administers the program and has presented Salvador with a Certificate of Completion.

Dr. Kenneth Kerri, program director, said Salvador is one of the first operators in the United States to complete the program. The course is available to all persons interested in the operation of wastewater treatment facilities.

Tupelo Road petition

After receiving a petition signed by Tupelo Road residents, selectmen said they will discuss the legality of closing the Tupelo Road entrance to Route 3A.

After they discuss the issue with town counsel, selectmen will decide how the entrance can be permanently closed.

Sixty-eight Tupelo Road residents, including Archie Rasmussen, complained about the dangerous exit and egress at the intersection. Several accidents have occurred there, they noted, including many severe mishaps. Every homeowner on that street and the four surrounding streets signed a petition requesting the closing, Rasmussen said. Only one homeowner, the man who originally petitioned to have the Route 3A entrance opened on the street, refused to sign the petition.

The density of traffic caused by vehicles exiting route 3A onto Tupelo Road is far in excess of any other similarly-populated residential neighborhood, Rasmussen said. The heavy traffic, he noted, is a concern to the numerous small children and elderly people on the street. "It's only 53 seconds to Pond Street and I don't think this inconvenience comes close to the value of people and the small children living there," Rasmussen said.

Executive secretary Donald Andrew said the police chief had no objections to the suggestion. He was awaiting a written letter from the fire chief. "I don't think it's too inconvenient to go to Pond Street," selectman Diane Sullivan noted.

Selectman Rocco Laugelle suggested if the entrance was closed, it not be done by asphalt. "If we do decide to close it, we ought to get some money to do it. We'll have to excavate and maybe loam it over or put trees there or something. I hate to see it closed with just asphalt."

Selectman James Gallagher said he would be in favor of closing the road and landscaping the entrance area. He said he will talk personally with town counsel about the issue and get back to Rasmussen with the answer. The issue will be back on the agenda within two weeks, selectmen said.

Board reorganization

At their meeting Monday night, selectmen unanimously selected Diane Sullivan chairman of the board. Rocco Laugelle was voted vice chairman.

Sullivan will replace former selectmen chairman Mary Jane McArthur who resigned from the board two weeks ago.

Committee appointments

At their meeting Monday night, selectmen made numerous appointments to several committees.

Selectmen voted to reappoint Donald McAllister to the cable advisory committee. Chairman Joseph McCool has decided not to seek reappointment, so there is a vacancy on that committee.

Town counsel Richard Henderson was reappointed for another year.

L. Emmett Holt, James Sandell and Hubert Van der Lugt were reappointed to the Cohasset Common Historical District Commission for three years.

Marian Atkinson was appointed an alternate to that group.

Selectmen reappointed Austin O'Toole to the conservation commission for three years. Jeffrie Bettinger will fill the unexpired term of former member Robert Maki until June 30, 1987.

Richard Silvia was named to the school facilities study committee along with Jane Hamilton. Francis Rogers submitted his resignation from that committee.

David Marks was voted shellfish warden for a one-year term. Selectmen will name members to the Cohasset Historical Commission at their next meeting.

No meeting coverage blasted

Selectman Rocco Laugelle blasted the local cable television channel for failing to provide coverage of the June special town meeting.

"Cable TV did not attend town meeting for two nights and I think it's a disgrace," he said, while being taped by Channel 3 during Monday night's meeting. "It bugs me. It's disgraceful they act this way."

Selectmen James Gallagher and Diane Sullivan agreed it was a part of the cable company's contract to provide coverage of the town meetings. However, they explained equipment problems forced American Cablesystems to cancel its coverage of the two-night event.

Handicapped parking

After selectman James Gallagher complained about the non enforcement of reserved handicapped parking, selectmen said they will look into the matter.

Gallagher said several times he has witnessed non handicapped drivers parking in the reserved areas in Cohasset. He also said it is the practice of the police department to void the first offense.

Executive secretary Donald Andrew explained that was the practice according to the state statute.

"It's a disgrace," selectman Rocco Laugelle said. "I can see raising the fine to $25."

Selectmen asked Andrew to see what the town can charge violators, and to remind police officers to enforce the state law.

Local boy makes good

Charles Harrington, assistant location manager for The Witches of Eastwick, is no stranger to the beauty of the South Shore. Harrington grew up on Black Rock Road, off Jerusalem Road in Cohasset.

After attending the Cohasset elementary schools and the junior high school, he went to Thayer Academy and Boston University, where he studied film.

Harrington worked for various companies, producing rock videos and commercials. Prior to Witches, he has worked on a feature called Risky Business, about a Harvard student, to be released in the fall.

Cohasset Heights questions

Many questions will soon be answered concerning the future of Cohasset Heights Ltd., a private landfill off Rte. 3A.

Tomorrow, the board of health will receive test results from monitoring wells at the site, according to Health Inspector Joseph Godzik. The results should shed some light on where water is flowing in the area, and whether contamination endangers the town's water supply at Lily Pond.

The board should also receive information on the landfill's liability insurance options and on the monetary value they will require for closure and post-closure operations, Godzik said.

He added, the board will look to see whether it will approve a $10 million liability document offered by Cohasset Heights Ltd.

REAL ESTATE GUIDELINES

Home Center Realty

INVESTING IN REAL ESTATE

Many people who play the real estate investment game are doing very well. The potential for income, appreciation and tax savings makes investment property especially attractive.

Before you dive in, it's important to get professional advice. You may want to start with a personal financial advisor who can help you set your investment goals. Then your Realtor can help you select a competetively-priced property that meets these goals; and he can answer questions about why a particular property is a solid investment. What features would make it easy to rent? What kind of maintenance expenses are you likely to inccur? What will your cash flow be, and how will the tax savings affect the bottom line? Is it in a neighborhood where property values are likely to increase or decrease, or will the prices remain relatively stable?

At HOME CENTER REALTY, our professional Realtors are especially knowlegeable about investment property. Please give us a call at 749-8833 or stop by our offices at 57 Water St., Hingham.

Committee reviews after school programs

The first phase for implementing an after-school child care program at the Cohasset Public Schools is underway, Assistant Supt. Stephen Hart told the school committee Monday.

"We're a little late," he said, "but we wanted to get it off the ground for September." The administration has sent flyers and registration forms to parents of children in grades 1-5.

Hart explained, the program will be held at the Joseph Osgood School and will run from the end of the school day until 6 p.m. on days when the public schools are in session.

The school will transport students to the Joseph Osgood School, from the Deer Hill School, he said, but parents will be responsible for transporting their children home at the end of the day.

"I hope we can get enough students to support the program," he said. A minimum of 20 children must be enrolled by July 31.

"The program can be run only if it will be self-supporting," he added. "We won't hire a program director unless we get at least 20 students."

A new addition to the plan was based on a similar program at the Hingham Public Schools. Parents will have the option of signing their kids up for the full five days per week, or for only three days per week or two days per week.

Monthly payments, which the school will expect in advance, will range from $70 for the two-day weeks, $85 for the three-day weeks and $100 for the five-day weeks.

Also, for each additional child from the same family, parents presently would get a 10 percent discount.

However, that discount will be a point for debate. Committee member Diana Kornet argued the comparative cost of home care for a second child per family would be much less. She suggested the discount should be raised to at least 20 percent.

Hart retorted that for the program to be self-supporting it would be difficult to offer much more of a discount.

Chairman Joseph Nedrow added, for people who use this program as true child care, it would be tax deductible."

But Kornet questioned whether that would be true under pending tax reforms.

The actual program components will be decided by the program director but will include games, physical activities, quiet time, reading, art and snacks.

Hart said if 20 students enroll, the school would hire a director, who would also be a teacher, and probably an aide.

If as many as 30 to 35 kids are signed up for the program he said the next step would be to consider expanding the program to two sites and hiring another teacher, and perhaps another aide.

Hart explained, "There is no ceiling on the number of students we will accept for the program; the number of students will determine the number of staff members we hire and whether it will be held at more than one site."

Selectmen order two dogs to be penned

The topic once again was dogs as selectmen held two hearings Monday night on complaints about unrestrained canines disturbing local neighborhoods.

In the first hearing, after listening to complaints from several neighbors of Bancroft Road and Beechwood Street, selectmen ordered the labrador owned by Robert Raffa to be restrained inside a fence in the rear of their home. The dog, because of its excessive barking at night, was ordered to be put inside the Raffa home at 14 Bancroft Road by 9:30 each night.

Raffa, who said he has been restraining the dog since he was ordered by the animal control officer in May, assured selectmen that "Grizzly" would be kept inside the rear yard of their home. He was told the dog could be walked if it was bound by a leash.

A few neighbors along Beechwood Street testified the labrador was not a threat to neighbors, but only fought occasionally with other canines. Barbara Litchfield said she has cared for the dog for the Raffa's "and I've never seen him act out toward any people."

She told selectmen the incidents of the dog becoming loose and fighting with other dogs were not intentional. "The dog is a very good dog," she stated.

Several neighbors, including Paul Donovan and Thomas Ford of Bancroft Road, told selectmen "Grizzly" had become loose of the restraint on different occasions. Donovan said he first complained of the dog November 20, 1983. Since he's been restrained in the front fenced in yard at the Raffa's, he said, the dog has continually barked at night, sometimes to midnight, Donovan said.

Ford told selectmen that after the dog was ordered restrained by Officer Richard Yokum, it became loose within two or three days and attacked his dog who was restrained on his property. The dog required two operations and a six-week recuperative period. Another neighbor at 27 Bancroft Road told how her dog was attacked while on her property. "The vet said the dog was so vicious, he was out to kill my dog," she stated.

Raffa explained to selectmen he kept the dog for security purposes while he traveled on business. The incidents when "Grizzly" fought with other dogs where he was accidentally let out of the home by a house guest, and when he became loose off the leash. The latest incident in late June occurred when a house guest accidentally let the dog outside the home. Since the June 23 letter from Officer Yokum, Raffa said he has restrained the dog continually.

Officer Yokum recommended selectmen order the dog permanently restrained. Selectmen agreed the dog should be permanently confined, but to the rear of the home where neighbors can't see or hear the animal. They also stipulated the dog be brought in each night by 9:30. "There's a potential permanent injury if he got free and permanently injured someone," selectman Diane Sullivan said.

In the second dog hearing, selectmen for the fourth time required Deborah Legos of Summer Street to restrain her dogs. Since they last issued the order, the dogs have quieted their constant barking, but they were found loose this weekend by the animal control officer.

Legos did not appear at Monday's meeting although she was advised the subject would be returned to the agenda. "She feels selectmen won't listen to her side," Officer Yokum stated.

After discussing the situation with Mendel Road residents Paul and Sandy Mattes, selectmen ordered the dogs penned on the Pond Street side of the Legos' residence, one dog at a time, never be allowed outside in the pen when she is not home, and that the dogs be brought inside the home by 9:30p.m.

Selectman Sullivan, who was concerned that this order was less severe than previous requirements made by the board, noted if one complaint is ever made about the Legos' dogs, they will be ordered removed from the town. Selectmen agreed Legos is to notify the building inspector immediately of the requirement to construct a pen alongside the Summer Street home.

Special needs application

Selectmen voted to sign the housing authority's application for state Chapter 689 funds for the construction of housing for special needs residents.

The housing authority will now apply to the state Executive Office of Communities and Development (EOCD) for the grant funding.

The housing authority withdrew their request at the June town meetiong to transfer school-owned land to the authority for the construction of special needs housing. The school committee has yet to decide whether to approve the land transfer to selectmen for use by the housing authority.

Selectman Diane Sullivan explained that in order to get on the state's funding list, the housing authority had to begin the application process. Even though a location could not be specified, selectmen thought it would be best to apply for the grant money now.

"This is to get us on the list," executive secretary Donald Andrew explained. The housing would be for eight mentally retarded adults with mobility impairment.

Later, Martha Gjesteby objected to the signing of the application when no location has been specified. The state will once again reject the incomplete application, the Old Pasture Road resident warned.

"We wanted to get a leg up, to get the process moving," Selectman Cliff Mitman said.

Gjesteby argued that selectmen can not preclude a vote of town meeting. "It's too preliminary," she said.

Selectman Rocco Laugelle noted, "we're giving away nothing. We just want to get this thing rolling and do our best."

Leonard is adjustment counselor coaching appointments, as well as a number of non-union staff reappointments.

The appointment of Edward Leonard as school adjustment counselor for Cohasset's two elementary schools was notable, because this is a brand new position in the system.

Michael Gill, health education coordinator for kindergarten through grade 12 had been pushing to get the post established for two years.

He explained, "I looked at a number of school systems and they all had an adjustment counselor or psychologist to help kids who have mental or family problems.

"But Cohasset referred kids with serious problems to outside agencies. There was nothing for kids whose cases were less severe, no one to prevent things from getting worse."

Gill said the new adjustment counselor will work with teachers and parents to help young children cope with family problems such as divorce and alcoholism.

"At the elementary school age," he explained, "emotional and social health are the most important concerns; they have a strong relationship to overall health later in life.

"It's very important at that stage that kids develop healthy attitudes about life, a positive self-image and self-esteem."

Leonard has been a Cohasset guidance counselor at the secondary level for the past two years. Previously, he has served as a guidance counselor at Hanover and Sacred Heart.

He has also had experience as a special needs teacher and adjustment counselor at Milton.

"He's done an excellent job while he's been here at Cohasset," Hart said. "He seems to be extremely well-prepared for this position."

be required to learn a script or utter any words. "They are strictly background, no acting involved," Osborne said.

One Hingham resident who was called to the Sonesta Hotel last Friday night was Ellen Tebbets.

She was called last Tuesday by the company and asked if she could go to the film company headquarters Friday night.

"Actually my husband took the call because I was out," she explained. "They said if I was still interested, to come in for a second interview Friday night.

Tebbets said she is still somewhat confused as to who they will be selecting, and when.

"My husband's impression was that this group would be the only extras used in the movie. But from what I understood Friday, it seemed they would be picking the extras from this group. It doesn't seem too clear at this point just what they are going to do," she said.

Director Miller spent a few minutes "making small talk with a bunch of suburban housewives" at the interview. He seemed, according to Tebbets, to be a very friendly, cordial man. "It couldn't have been too easy for him to have a conversation with this big bunch of strangers, but he was very nice and easy to talk with," she added. The assistant director told the group a final decision regarding the extras would be made within two weeks.

Robin Suhrbier of South Main Street in Cohasset was called back to the Friday night interview.

"They wanted us there to take another look at us," she said, estimating the crowd at 75 to 100 persons. "They wanted to see if you looked like your photograph. And if they couldn't really tell, they took a Polaroid of you."

Suhrbier, who went to the Cohasset casting call with her son and dog, said she was the only one in her family asked to the second interview. "When they called me, I asked them 'what about the others?' They said not to worry, that they could be called anyday to work in the film.

"From what I understood, they plan to narrow down that group from Friday night. They gave us no idea that those of us in this group were guaranteed a part in the film," she added.

A few other persons from Cohasset were called to the second interview, including Betsy Hoopes, Christine Collins, and Marian Atkinson and her daughter.

"We were never given the impression that we had more than we have right now. We just walked past the director and met him and that was it. No guarantees. They told us not to sit by the phone, but they would notify us if we were needed," Suhrbier said.

The Casting Company stated it would be hiring fifty percent union actors and fifty percent non-union extras.

Sculptor selected to do Vietnam memorial

design was viewed by hundreds of visitors and friends. Several Vietnam vets were included in that gathering, Kowal noted. Without exception, everyone, including war-weary veterans, accepted the design and approved of the concept.

Although it may be difficult for some to think a hardened vet would endorse an abstract work of art, Kowal said acceptance has been unanimous. The selection by the Boston Vietnam Veterans Association was also a unanimous vote.

The selected sculpture will be 21 feet high and 26 feet across. It will be made of stainless Corten steel with highlights on the upper images and inlaid granite where the names of the deceased Vietnam veterans, the POW's and the MIA's from Massachusetts will be listed.

Every inch of the scuplture has been designed for a specific purpose. Size, dimension, and material all work toward the goal expressed by the Cohasset artist.

In his drawings submitted to the competition, Kowal noted that Vietnam was:

"a war whose images were carried to the world via media: tv, film and graphic black and white.

The nature of the war was hermetic, ie. the men were related to each other - isolated by nature and machines - protected by and protecting each other.

A visually explosive war - the helicoptor a primary image.

The lingering burden upon the veterans of Vietnam is one of rejection, isolation, and despair along with the destructive emotions and physical damage, even spiritual - burdens carried forward by those least responsible for the war's inception, to say nothing of its continuance.

Slowly, a sympathetic coming together of the people, the vets, is taking place - a healing and understanding of flawed judgements - the repercussions wrought to the national psyche.

Guilt and recrimination are now being set aside to deal with the 'fact' that something did take place -that it must be assimilated, not to be forgotten but acknowledged and the human condition answered -honorably addressed."

Those were the words submitted along with his artwork to the Vietnam Veterans Association. The words attempted to express his need to create the sculpture.

According to Kowal, the sculpture will be an abstract graphic representation of the Vietnam war. The finished product will weigh 17 tons and will be manufactured by one of the many factories the artist has worked with for the past 10 years.

Kowal will be the project manager, supplying the lifesize proportional drawings to the manufacturers. The granite inlaid will be cut and engraved at a second location, he explained. There will be more than 1,300 names included on the memorial.

Kowal refuses to describe his work to observers. Perceptions reached by the non artist are as valid to Kowal as the conclusion of the creator. "People should not be intimidated by art," he emphasized. "Most frequently people are not intimidated by the artist, but by the attitude of the art world."

The memorial produces a dual image. From the distance, the top portion of the monument resembles flowers, the wildlife of Vietnam. Images of combat soldiers, and helicopters are woven into this 'explosive' scene at the very tip of the memorial. The overall size and proportion of the memorial looks like an eastern pagoda. Large cuts into the steel sides resemble the tall blades of grass where the battles were fought.

Cold solid steel and black granite represent the media representation of the war. The specialized Corten steel is virtually vandal-proof and weather-resistant, Kowal added.

"The materials to be used are historic and only of our time," he explained.

At a July 9 meeting, members of the Vietnam Veterans Association selected the Boston Common as their primary site for the memorial. Kowal concurs. "I drove by the Common really slow about two times that day. It is really so huge, the memorial would look perfect there," he said.

The artist emphasized the entire memorial project is staffed by volunteers. None of the association members will be paid for their efforts to establish a war memorial. "It's very likely I will never see a dime for my work either," Kowal stated matter-of-factly.

"All things in this world are not governed by profit," he said. "There are higher values. That I won't get paid for this does not bother me. It never crossed my mind. If that were the case, I'd never be an artist."

The cost of the Vietnam memorial will approach $650,000. That will include construction costs, landscaping of the site and perpetual maintenance of the artwork.

Kowal is impressed with the Washington, D.C. memorial wall, and realizes his work may face the same skeptical public reception. "The Washington memorial over time has proven itself to be a significant monument," he stated. "Controversy always procedes an innovative design and I am used to controversy. It won't bother me."

His memorial will be constructed on a "human scale," with the overwhelming size and proportion of the steel structure representative of the U.S. mission in that foreign land. "The piece is on a human scale. The size of the piece will not be arbitrary," he said.

Because the memorial project is being conducted on a strictly volunteer basis, contributions are requested. As Kowal noted, Massachusetts is one of the ten last states in the country to erect a memorial to the dead and missing of the Vietnam War.

Major corporations have already contributed to the project, including: Raytheon, Digital, Polaroid, and General Electric.

Further contributions may be sent to:

☐Patty Johnson makes the news this week, as she is a recent graduate of Syracuse University. While at Syracuse she made the dean's list, and graduated this spring with a Fine Arts Degree. It seems that she loved New York life, she is a resident there now, with a grand job! She is working for Erica Wilson, the fine needlepoint artist that so many of us use her designs that we love. Congratulations Patty, and good luck in your new venture.

☐The Cohasset Swim team captured the South Shore League Title last summer, and it seems to be picking up right where it left off. They were victorious in their first meet against the Scituate Knights of Columbus, with many contributing to the win! This season promises to be an exciting one, stay tuned for meet results that are sure to be reported in the Mariner!

☐Chris Keating was spotted at the South Shore Music Circus last weekend, and did he have news! He has settled in Duxbury now, and has another surprise...he and his wife are the delighted parents of twins! Bet that's a busy couple! Also bet that Margaret and Gerard Keating are two very proud grandparents.

☐Do you wonder if maybe the witches have "cast their spell" over Cohasset, sending us a summer of rainy weather?

☐Jonathan D. Belanger of 100 Pond Street has been named to the dean's list at the University of Lowell for the spring semester of 1986. John is a Computer Science major, and had to have a semester rating of not less than 3.0 and no grade of B-C to be included on the list.

☐Hats off to the South Shore Playhouse Associates, Inc., for all of the grants they awarded to various nonprofit South Shore Organizations. A total of 27 theatrical, artistic, educational, recreational and community service organizations were beneficiaries of the gifts, with two of the awards being challenge grants for major building programs. They are the South Shore Art Center and the Cohasset Community Center. Grant money is paid out of income earned on a Community Trust Fund, administered by the organization's Board of Directors, of which Bruce T. Cameron is President.

Ronald Rawson has served as Managing Director and Producer for 19 years and is credited with adapting the programming to changing public tastes and with bringing the theatre to become a successful one.

☐With all of this rainy weather, maybe you are looking for something "constructive" to do...remember the Village Fair if you have extra materials, they can use them for the Children's Table. They need felt, Christmas fabrics, red flannel, calicos, broadcloth and yarn. If you can help them, call Jane Long (383-1281), Nancy McLaughlin (383-0167) or a representative from your church. If you would like to donate time and service to them, give them a call. It's fun to make the various items they plan, and will keep you nice and busy.

Lillian Colavacchio from the Dept. of Elderly Affairs speaks to the Walking Club members of the Senior Center.

☐Congratulations to John P. Manning, Peter J. Logan, Robert C. Jordan, Jr. and Philip H. Smith, all of whom are new corporators of Cohasset Savings Bank.

☐Saw Sharon Burnell last week, and she is one busy gal! Sharon is the wife of Tom Burnell, former CHS hockey coach, and she and her partner have opened an antique shop in North Scituate. Looks as though they have some nifty things, stop in and take a peek!

☐Isn't it nice that our town can boast about having two experts on the Boston Red Sox, this year of all years as they are doing so well...Mr. Clark was spoken about last week, and Bill Enos' ability to sign the stars cannot go unnoticed! His scouting efforts have paid off more than once, and his knowledge of baseball is super. Those two gentlemen must truly be enjoying this summer, as the Red Sox team hasn't been this good in a long time (when was the last time you couldn't go in and buy a ticket in the bleachers?).

☐Everyone seems pleased with John McNabb's decision not to call for a special election to fill the vacancy left by Mary Jane McArthur. The concensus seems to be that all have faith in the present board until next spring, and that's good!

☐Chartis B. Langmaid was recently appointed part-time bookkeeper in the treasurer-collector's office. Her appointment is for twelve hours per week. So go by and say hi to Chartis and her fellow workers!

☐Let us know your news, there should be a lot of it this summer...

No circus, please

Selectman chairman Diane Sullivan said it best Monday night.

"We don't want this to become a sideshow."

She was referring at that point to a request by two canteen drivers for seasonal vendors licenses to be used during the filming of "Witches of Eastwick." The requests were passed over without consideration.

But it's how we all feel as we await, with increasing apprehension, the arrival of the film crews.

It's no secret that crowds are expected, that we on the East Coast are not as accustomed to movie-making as our neighbors to the west. When Jack Nicholson and Cher invade our hometown, it's going to attract attention.

And the thing that concerns us, more than the volume of the sightseers, is that they will not be from Cohasset or a familiar nearby community. We can surely expect that a substantial portion of the bystanders will be out-of-towners grasping for a glance at movie stars.

Just the other night on the steps of the town hall, two men wandered into the hallway outside the closed doors of the selectmen's executive session. "Is this where they are going to make the movie?" they inquired. "Isn't this the church?"

They wanted to know when the film crews would be arriving. Everyone in the hallway shrugged their shoulders and held up their hands.

This was surely the tip of the iceberg. There will undoubtedly be more inquiries and many more strangers coming into our town.

The local police will have their work cut out for them. Town officials can expect a long, hot summer ahead.

But let's not become pessimistic. We can deal with this and surely there will be fun and excitement to be enjoyed.

No, we don't want our lovely town turned into a ringside circus. We can sit back and enjoy this once-in-a-lifetime event. It can be fun, so let's do our part to keep it that way.

If police warn us to stay away from a scene, do so. If we are watching a scene being filmed, cooperate with the movie-makers. Silence is a necessity which we can easily guarantee.

Town officials will be watching the situation closely. The contract they signed with Warner Brothers has guaranteed them cooperation for our serenity.

We hope this will be a memorable, enjoyable summer for Cohasset - for all the best reasons.

'Witches' stimulate discussion

To the Editor:

A possible fringe benefit from Warner Bros. coming to Cohasset may be the stimulation of some enlightening religious discussion. "The Witches of Eastwick" contains vulgar language and flouts Christian values as my colleague Dan Brodeur notes. It is, after all, a story about evil. And, as Dick Hayes observed in his perceptive review, the book does not represent Updike's best work. Still, I have found that this rather seamy and steamy little novel provokes conversation about any number of interesting topics from witchcraft to women's rights to the quality of life in small New England towns to the larger questions of immortality and sin. From that perspective Cohasset may provide the setting for a motion picture that is not only entertaining, but of social value as well.

I respect Dan Brodeur's effort to live by the discipline of a strick acceptance of the Bible as an authoritative account of God's will for humankind, but suggest that this acceptance raises a number of perplexing problems. Leviticus 11:10, for example, proscribes the consumption of shellfish including lobster, "But anything in the seas or the rivers that has not fins and scales, of the swarming creatures in the waters and of the living creatures that are in the waters, is an abomination to you." This dietary restriction made sense in the ancient world when shellfish, which are particulary vulnerable to spoilage, could be dangerous to eat. In the modern age however, I trust that even a Baptist may enjoy an occasional lobster and have no objection to those who participate in the harvesting and sale of these creatures without scales which the Bible describes as an abomination.

The passage Mr. Brodeur quotes from Deuteronomy 18 proscribing witchcraft evokes far more difficult issues. We must remember that when the Hebrews invaded Canaan they ruthlessly attempted to destroy the culture and the religion of the people they conquered. Also at various times throughout the Old Testament we read of the Hebrew's stubborn resistance to religious assimilation. Most of Deuteronomy was written during the seventh century B.C., a time of resurgent Judean nationalism following a period of Assyrian domination. Representing their writings as the words of Moses Deuteronomy 18:9 sternly warns, "When you come into the land which the Lord your God gives you, you shall not learn to follow the abominable practices of those nations." Certainly some of those practices were abominable, i.e. child sacrifice "There shall not be found among you anyone who makes his son or his daughter pass through the fire..." but many others involved agricultural festivals and nature lore which were rich in meaning, which revered the female aspects of divinty, and which were far more tolerant of differences than the intense nationalism of these partisan Deuteronomic writers and lawmakers. Unfortunately, over the centuries these harsh, chauvinistic, Deuteronomic laws, many of them calling for capital punishment, have often become the basis for the persecution and murder of innocent people, among them, the so called witches of Salem.

There are good and bad Hollywood movies and there are good and bad novels, but within the people who write them, act in them and criticize them there is a mixture of both good and ill and the one is not always easy to distinguish from the other. The greater moral danger occurs when in God's name we begin to label one group of people as the source of evil whether they be Canaanites or witches or Hollywood film makers. The God of our common belief is a God who bids us to love one another, to forgive one another, and to judge not that we not be judged.

Was it mere coincidence that these notes were received on the day after a group of Rhode Island visitors toured Cohasset, or perhaps is some mischievous individual attempting to stir up trouble among us?

Band member is quite mad

(This letter was sent to the Casting Company of Boston. Ed.)

I am quite mad about how you came to The Deer Hill School for a band scene. You said you would take twenty kids to be in the band scene from the band. Then you also said you would use the remaining kids as other extras. Everyone in the band had dreams of becoming a movie star, because it's only once in a lifetime a casting company comes to your town and says they're filming a movie. My dreams were shattered when you failed to call me.

I found out you only took four people from my school to be in the whole entire movie. You were starting to film the next week, and you hadn't called me yet. I think what you did to the kids in the band, was very mean. That is why I am writing this letter.

A look at the musical history of Cohasset

By David Wadsworth
Special to the Mariner

The latter half of the 19th century saw a flourishing of the performing arts in Cohasset's homes as living rooms often doubled as recital halls, and larger spaces became concert halls. In the days before modern radio and television, home entertainment required participation on the part of talented family members.

Music, both serious classical and light classical in style, issued from homes and halls in a proliferation not equalled since. In the world before 1900, Americans looked to European music for their cultural improvement. Thus the music of Bach, Mozart and Beethoven vied with that of Offenbach, Schumann and Strauss on the American musical scene, performed by young and old alike, both amateur and professional. Where there was music-making, there also had to be musical instrument making, even in small towns.

For many years Cohasset could point to its own resident violin maker, himself an accomplished musician, collector of fine instruments, and student of the most famous violins from Europe. The violin maker was Daniel Lincoln Wood, of an old Cohasset family. The violins made in his small shop were known for their fine tone and were played by musicians in many parts of the country.

Today, one of D. L. Wood's descendants plays a carefully restored Wood violin, perhaps one of the very few still existing. In the latter 19th century Americans looked to Europe not only for its music but also for its musical instruments, the finest ever created. Thus it was that Daniel Lincoln Wood studied the violins of Giuseppi Antonio Guarneri and Nicole Amati, and used those baroque masterpieces as models for the ones he would create, centuries after the originals.

In the South Shore "Blue Book" of the late 1800's, Wood stated, "For several years, having made the violin and its construction a constant study, using two models, the 'Guarnerius' and the 'Amati', I feel every confidence in offering them to the public..." Wood displayed his Cohasset-made instruments at the Mechanics Fair in Boston, and offered to send one "on five days trial to anyone wishing to purchase. My hand made violins range in prices from $50 to $400. For $6 one could have one's violin restained with high-grade Amber Varnish. That Wood did not lack for discriminating and satisfied customers is evident from the numerous testimonials of musicians published in the "Blue Book".

Old maps of Cohasset show D.L. Wood's home to have been on the west side of South Main Street just a few yards south of Beechwood Street. He used the North Scituate Post Office as his mailing address. Daniel Lincoln Wood, born in January of 1830 to Osborn and Silence Tower (Lincoln) Wood of Beechwood Street, married in January of 1861 Nancy Caroline Babson of Cohasset. They had three children of whom the last, Daniel H., was born in 1866. Daniel Lincoln Wood remained active in collecting, playing and making violins to at least his 78th year, at which time he marked his 50th year as a collector and maker. His favorite avocation was gunning, and at that age still could be seen roaming local fields and woods with his hunting rifle in hand.

In his later years the Cohasset violin maker moved to the North Scituate home of his son Daniel H. Wood. It was there that on November 5, 1913, at the age of 83, he died, as the town's vital records tersely state, from "results of age."

Daniel Lincoln Wood, Cohasset's most important late-19th century musical instrument maker, is buried in the Beechwood Cemetery, not far from his early Cohasset ancestors.

Fairoaks resident tells of septic horror story

Letters

To the Editor:

In reading Mr. Campbell's latest letter it dawned on me that no one is speaking about reality when they mention "repairs to residents' septic systems."

I felt compelled to write this letter because of the shock and surprise my fellow residents show to my current situation. I purchased this house in June, 1984 and shortly after moving in discovered my septic system was failing. The previous owner had gone to great lengths to hide the condition from the real estate agent and any prospective buyers. He built a crude rock garden over the leaking area.

Never having lived in a house with anything but sewers I had no reason to even concern myself with the "septic system" because that word meant "sewer" to me. Even when the engineer inspected the house prior to passing papers and said he was not equipped to inspect the "septic system" I felt he meant "sewer."

To make a long story short, things got progressivly worse until January 1986 when the effluent left the property and I was cited by the Board of Health. The neighbors and several Septic Tank companies told me that the problem existed long before I purchased the house.

After three months of engineering work and two plans (one estimated at $35,000) I am having the system "repaired." When it's competed it will have cost me $20,000. I feel rather fortunate that I have been able to obtain short and long term aid in the financing.

During the many excavations and surveys of my property, it was uncovered that the original system was not installed in accordance with approval plans. My engineer feels this was commonplace in Cohasset 15 to 20 years ago. The fresh water pipe runs in the leaching field.

My attorneys, one of the major Boston law firms, is preparing litigation against all parties they feel responsible for this situation. I'd like to let others know that my engineers feel this failure is just the "tip of the iceberg" regarding homes built in Cohasset 1965-1980.

We need more public servants

To the Editor:

I am sorry indeed to hear of the departure of Mary Jane McArthur from Cohasset's Board of Selectmen. She has brought dedication, competence, wisdom and grace to an important and difficult job in our town government. She did her job exceptionally well and is the type of person who should be attracted to public service. All of these things could also be said of Jacqueline Dormitzer who resigned her post on the Advisory Committee earlier this year.

While many will regret the departure of these two able public officials, it is now more important than ever for citizens of Cohasset to realize the crucial and continuing need to identify and recruit for key jobs people who will continue the tradition of effective public service as exemplified by these two women.

Shouldn't we be looking now for future candidates who are intelligent, hard-working and with a record of solid achievement. Also important for a town official is the quality of being a team player able to assemble and harmonize facts and to avoid needless or self-serving controversy. In a democracy, it is also important to be electable, but this criterion also does not ensure an effective public servant. This may be a good time for all sectors in our town electorate to ponder collectively how we select and elect our candidates and then work together to recruit some like Mary Jane and Jackie for the next election. As a noted American recently asked, "Why Not the Best?"

Golden hasn't grasped nuclear facts

To the Editor:

It's sad to see the bright young Senator Golden join with the anti-nuclear jackals who are capitalizing on Boston Edison's troubles at Pilgrim Station. His letter, published in several local papers, doesn't indicate a firm grasp of the facts.

For example, it is ridiculous to recommend a 40 mile radius emergency planning zone (EPZ) for evacuation.

Although the Chernobyl accident has little relevance to U.S. style water moderated reactors, it did demonstrate that heavy radiation doses justifying brisk evacuation are confined to the immediate plant area. Rather than a 10 mile or larger EPZ, which tends to clog the roads with those who have no real need to evacuate, it would be better to have something like a 2 mile EPZ, supplemented by well equipped mobile monitoring units which can advise ad-hoc and unhurried response further out, (sheltering or moving) wherever needed, depending on wind direction, rainfall, etc. Normal police traffic control and warnings by TV and radio would suffice.

In other words, fewer sirens, more flexibility, and exotic preplanning concentrated on the inner area. It'll be a while, admittedly, before the NRC revises its rules, it only moves swiftly when making them more severe—which doesn't always mean better. The Soviets delayed any evacuation, and then hurriedly evacuated people for miles around—but their reactor had essentially no containment, despite some erroneous implications by the Union of Concerned Scientists.

In any case, evacuation is only a superimposed layer of safety—the real safeguard in U.S. style water reactors is the containment vessel which completely encloses the reactor system and which is designed and tested to withstand accident pressures. There's nothing wrong with the Mark I containment used on Pilgrim. The different containments used on later Boiling Water Reactors were developed to accommodate larger reactors, and are perhaps a more efficient and economical use of materials to obtain the same safety with some construction and operating advantages. The Fermi 2 reactor, which was licensed in 1985, has a Mark I containment.

In the autumn, a wise squirrel begins to provide for the winter; he doesn't say "no need for concern, nuts are plentiful now." Well, electricity supply may seem plentiful now, but our excess capacity is eroding rapidly as electrical demand continues to grow, and we should be building for the future. We're going to need all viable sources of electricity, and can't cavalierly set aside Pilgrim or Seabrook. Beats me why politicians like to prattle about conserving energy, while their constituents, their places of employment, the institutions that serve them, use even more electricity. Less non-electric energy, but more electricity.

Senator Golden's statement that "NRC studies indicate that a sudden meltdown or explosion would spread dangerous radiation levels well beyond 10 miles" is incorrect. The studies conducted since Three Mile Island by the international scientific community, to which the NRC has been a party, reveal just the opposite.

Senator Golden is thinking of some studies conducted many years ago, in which it was assumed that no engineered safeguards, like containment, existed. Even Chernobyl, with virtually no containment over the reactor, and a flammable graphite moderator instead of water, did not spread very high levels far from the reactor—although very low levels were spread over long distances.

The peaceful atom may be slowed down by ignorance and political opportunism, but the verities of electricity demand and sources of supply (including the acid rain and greenhouse efffect considerations) ensure that it will be the dominant source of electricity in the future. The more it is understood, the less will be feared.

Plant radiation presents hazard

To the Editor:

At the recent hearing on the provisions for public safety in the event of a nuclear malfunction at Pilgrim I, Boston Edison officials answering questions on the decommissioning of nuclear plants when their life expectancy has run out left the impression that the reason for taking them out of service is that they become "uneconomical" and that in 30-40 years new technology would require

Anne Franklin named area human services director

By Marilyn Jackson
Mariner Staff

When Anne Franklin graduated from college some 20 years ago with a nursing degree, little did she know where her career would take her.

Last week, the 41-year-old Marshfield resident was named director of the new human services office serving the South Shore and Brockton. Said Philip W. Johnston, secretary of the Executive Office of Human Services, "Anne has a broad background in human services and understands the needs and problems which face the communities she will serve."

In her newly created job, Franklin will work as a problem-solver, bringing people together and helping cut through bureaucratic red tape.

Franklin will work out of the state Department of Public Welfare office in Norwell, next to the Norwell Knoll Nursing Home on Route 53. It's a fairly central location for the geographic area she serves — the Plymouth area, the coastal communities Quincy, Weymouth, Braintree and Greater Brockton — altogether some 30 communities, including two cities.

About two years ago Gov. Michael Dukakis opened an office in western Massachusetts, a sort-of western State House, to help bridge the gap in communications which local officials perceived and provide access.

"One of the things that really struck the governor and Secretary Johnston was how cut off the people felt," said Franklin. "Since the office opened in western Massachusetts, there has been a terrific response."

Johnston named the first area human services director several months ago in the Greater Springfield area. Since then, he has appointed others — in Hyannis, Worcester and in northeastern Massachusetts..

"Many people feel disconnected with state government and don't know where to seek assistance, although in Marshfield, it is a little different because Johnston lives in Marshfield and served as state representative for three terms," she said.

As an area human services director, Franklin's work is cut out for her.

Johnston's secretariat oversees 15 state departments which spend about half of the state's annual budget, or about $3.7 billion.

Those departments include the Departments of public and mental health, welfare, social services, youth services, corrections, parole, the commissions for the blind and deaf and rehabilitation, veterans' services and a couple of others.

"What's the key is that lots of groups need services from more than one agency," said Franklin. "If we are going to be a responsive office, a compassionate one, you've got to be able to coordinate."

For example, she said, "there is no way to separate housing needs from human service issues....if you think of the homeless, a number of agencies may need to be involved."

Homelessness is just one issue she expects to deal with, especially since the governor has made it a top priority of his administration to ensure that affordable housing be developed.

Franklin said that Johnston and Amy Anthony, secretary of the state Executive Office of Communities and Development, work closely together.

In Plymouth, she said, the Coalition for the Homeless is trying to establish an emergency shelter for families. Franklin said she will serve as the link, the resource, to put that group in touch with the various state agencies necessary to bring about the realization of this project.

In Quincy, she said, the Interfaith Shelter Coalition is trying to establish a similar shelter in the Registry of Motor Vehicles building near the police station. She said she would be trying to expedite the matter.

"I will be meeting with all the regional administrators (of the various state agencies) on a regular basis to coordinate services, to identify and address problems within the system.

"Even though issues in the various regions may be the same, each problem may have a different flavor. In Plymouth, transportation is a major problem for clients trying to get to service centers," she said. In Brockton, however, there is an existing transit authority, and the problem for clients there could be different.

"One of the things I hope to bring to this job in terms of being a liaison to Phil is being a voice for the community," said Franklin. She said it would be a two-way communication.

Franklin met Johnston before he became a state representative in 1974, when they, along with several other Marshfield residents, formed project Friend, a family counseling project. About the same time she helped organize the Plymouth County National Organization of Women's rape task force.

Later, she became Johnston's legislative aide, when lawmakers became fulltime. She did a lot of constituent work for Johnston during her three years at the State House, then opted for a position in the private sector.

"It was a whole new world, a very different learning experience, and ultimately I decided I preferred the helping professions."

After Johnston was appointed by the governor for a cabinet position, Franklin was named a policy analyst for the Executive Office of Human Services. She held that post about 18 months before receiving this new assignment.

"Having worked with a number of agencies, from different perspectives, I hope that (that experience) will be an asset. I have an understanding of the system and know how all the pieces fit together," she said.

Franklin graduated from the University of Connecticut with a bachelor of science degree in nursing. She worked in Connecticut and Boston hospitals before moving from Braintree to Marshfield 13 years ago.

Franklin said she never had any time to serve on any elected or appointed town boards. But nevertheless she has been involved in politics, serving on the Democratic Town Committee and as a registrar of voters.

"Government, politics play a big role in what human services are provided and how they are provided," she observed.

Locally, she also serves as vice president of the parish council at St. Christine's Church.

Soccer Camp

During the week of August 11 through August 16 the Cohasset Soccer Club will bring professional soccer coaches to Cohasset to conduct a week long soccer day camp for children in the community.

The camp will be conducted by North American Soccer Camp, Inc., of Gales Ferry, Connecticut. The company employs English Football (Soccer) Association certified coaches and will work with 6,900 children in 16 states this summer. Jack Worley, director of the Cohasset recreation department is coordinating the program. Registration is open to all children in the area.

"We have a chance to bring some first rate coaches to Cohasset to work with our children", said Worley. The camp will run three hours each day of the week and provide instruction in soccer skills and tactics. This is the third year the soccer association has conducted a camp in town.

Gary Russell, former educator and semi-professional soccer player, started his first camp in 1969 in Pittsburgh. This past year North American Soccer Camps, Inc. introduced Russell's teaching and coaching concepts to both children and parents in 158 soccer clubs around the country.

The idea of bringing camps right into youngsters' backyards arose when Russell was teaching fifth grade in Pittsburgh. "It's usually only the older kids who are able to go away to camp, but the youngest children should also be given proper instruction, and a chance to participate in a quality program," says Russell.

For information about the soccer camp, contact John Worley, Cohasset recreation department 383-6791 or John Kinchla 383-6851 or 383-6522.

Ms. Anne Hayden, Children's Librarian from Marshfield, will be the guest storyteller. Her tales will include "The Grateful Old Cailleach," a ghost story from Scotland, as well as "Wicked John," which is an American folktale of a trickster who outdoes the Devil, himself.

Ms. Hayden has performed extensively on the South Shore and in her own library. She is back for a repeat performance at the Paul Pratt Library by popular demand. Her program will last about 45 minutes.

Golden urges suspension of Pilgrim I plant license

This is a copy of state Sen. William B. Golden's prepared testimony he was scheduled to deliver July 16 before the Congressional subcommittee on energy, conservation and power in Washington.

I want to thank you and the members of the committee for giving me the opportunity to appear before you today. Shortly after World War II, the federal government initiated a bold national policy to develop the peaceful use of nuclear energy. Today, many aspects of this policy have failed. These failures imperil the health, safety and welfare of millions of Americans and stand in the way of the development of a safe and secure energy future. It is critical that we appreciate what these policy failures have meant.

The nuclear industry has not achieved uniform standards of excellence. Some plants have state-of-the-art technology. Some are well-managed. Some are appropriately located in areas away from population centers. Some are efficient, cost-effective producers of electricity. A few — those run by the military — have adequate security.

However, many others were poorly designed and now have outdated equipment. They are located in areas that are densely populated or are vulnerable because of their geography. Some plants are poorly managed. Some no longer make economic sense. Nearly all civilian reactors have inadequate protection from new and more sophisticated security threats.

The federal government, which has the central responsibility for nuclear safety, has failed to understand local conditions and concerns. It has not made sufficient distinction between good and bad nuclear plants.

Boston Edison's Pilgrim Nuclear Power Station — located in America's hometown, Plymouth, Massachusetts — has come to symbolize the failure of this policy. The problems of this plant fall in five broad categories: management, technology, emergency planning, security and economics.

"I urge this committee to use its influence to persuade the NRC to hold hearings on the possible suspension, revocation or transfer of Boston Edison's license to operate Pilgrim."

Pilgrim has long suffered from poor management. In 1982, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission levied what was then the largest civil penalty in the agency's history against Boston Edison for management and safety problems. The NRC's SALP reports, or overall performance reviews, for 1981, 1982 and 1985 gave Boston Edison the lowest possible rating for plant operations. The most recent SALP report, issued this February, cited the company for poor staffing, supervision, procedures and self-assessment.

A special NRC inspection report issued on April 2, again pointed out staffing and organizational deficiencies. In May, the NRC commissioners told this committee that Pilgrim is one of the worst-run and least-safe plants in the country. In June, the Massachusetts Department of Public Utilities issued a sweeping criticism of Boston Edison's overall management, concluding that the company had all but abdicated its responsibility for planning.

These reports and disclosures have destroyed public confidence in Boston Edison's ability to manage Pilgrim safely. They are sufficient cause for the NRC to hold public hearings on whether this utility should be allowed to continue to run the plant. The NRC has refused to take this step, and because of this refusal, the public is rapidly losing confidence in the NRC's ability to regulate Pilgrim.

I urge this committee to use its influence to persuade the NRC to hold hearings on the possible suspension, revocation or transfer of Boston Edison's license to operate Pilgrim.

The adequacy of Pilgrim's containment structure is another matter of serious concern. Pilgrim is a 1960s model General Electric boiling water reactor with a Mark I containment vessel. The NRC's chief safety official, Harold Denton, recently stated that there is a 90 percent probability of failure of a Mark I vessel in the event of a core meltdown. This level of risk is intolerable. The NRC should demand that Pilgrim's containment be upgraded to the highest standards the industry can provide.

The NRC can no longer persist in ignoring important design distinctions among nuclear plants. It is time to determine whether it is more economical to upgrade the Mark I system or to close plants with Mark I containment permanently.

No issue so plainly illustrates the failure of national nuclear policy as emergency preparedness. The public might be more inclined to accept the pronouncements of the experts on the highly technical issues surrounding nuclear power if the emergency plans for nuclear plants were not so patently inadequate.

The 10-mile emergency preparedness zone, which the NRC requires of all nuclear facilities, may make sense for a plant located in the middle of a western desert. But it is clearly inappropriate for densely populated urban and suburban areas of the Northeast.

A serious accident at Pilgrim would have effects far beyond the 10-mile zone. Plans should be developed to deal with an emergency at Pilgrim that would affect Boston, which is 40 miles away, or Cape Cod, which is only 12 miles from the plant.

Boston Edison, the NRC, and the Federal Emergency Management Agency have assigned a low priority to emergency planning. The Pilgrim plan has never received formal approval from FEMA or the NRC. FEMA did not even receive a copy of the most recent Pilgrim plan until 10 months after it was prepared.

Neither the utility nor the federal government has dealt with the cost of adequate emergency planning. In an actual emergency, the crucial links in the chain of command are unpaid, minimally trained local civil defense directors. For any plan to work, professional civil defense departments with adequate staffs and equipment must be in place.

In this age of global terrorism, political extremism and individual fanaticism, it is imperative that security be upgraded at Pilgrim and all other nuclear plants. Official NRC regulations call for strict security at nuclear plants. However, this official policy has not been effectively implemented by the nuclear industry or the NRC.

In an attempt to lull the public into a comfortable feeling about nuclear power, the Atomic Industrial Forum — a nuclear industry organization — suggested last week that nuclear power plants are ideal summer tourist attractions. This attitude is irresponsible and dangerous. Security interests require that the public be kept as far away as possible from nuclear plants.

The NRC has failed to realize that the effectiveness of its elaborate security regulations is no better than the individuals who carry them out. At Pilgrim this task falls to individuals who are recruited through classified ads in the local weekly newspaper stating, "We are looking for those individuals with a career as a nuclear security officer in mind and would like to earn $11,000 to $18,000...You must be at least 19 years old and must bring with you copies of birth certificate, driver's license, high school diploma or G.E.D. certificate." Security at nuclear plants demands higher standards.

At Pilgrim, security problems are compounded by reports of alcohol and drug abuse, horseplay in sensitive parts of the plant and continuing labor-management strife.

This committee should seriously consider having the United States military or the Department of Defense police provide direct security for Pilgrim and all other nuclear plants. Nuclear facilities are not tourist attractions. They are sensitive installations which in the wrong hands could expose civilian populations to catastrophic dangers.

Finally, national nuclear policy has failed because the federal government has lost sight of the policy's prime objective — cheap energy. A chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission once stated that nuclear power would give us electricity "too cheap to meter." This clearly has proven false. Today, we need to re-examine all of the old assumptions surrounding the economics of nuclear power.

A cost-benefit analysis of Pilgrim has not been conducted since the plant went on line 15 years ago. Pilgrim and other existing plants are becoming increasingly expensive to run, as the costs of maintenance and safety improvements escalate. The public is demanding better security, management and safety at nuclear plants. These measures will cost money. The economics of all nuclear plants should be subjected to thorough reviews.

These reviews also should take into account items that are undervalued on company balance sheets or may not show up at all. The public has subsidized nuclear power by limiting utility liability for accidents through the Price Anderson Act. Civil defense planning and government regulation are other costs to the public of nuclear power. The future costs of decommissioning and waste disposal are still unknown.

I urge this committee to press for the suspension of Pilgrim's license until the following actions are taken:

- The NRC holds public hearings on whether Boston Edison is qualified to manage the plant.
- The reconstruction or replacement of the existing containment vessel so that Pilgrim has a state-of-the-art containment system.
- The creation of a 40-mile emergency planning zone and the development of a new civil defense program, which would be funded by Boston Edison and would be capable of responding to a serious accident at Pilgrim.
- The formation of a military or Defense Department police security force for Pilgrim and all other nuclear facilities.
- The completion of an economic cost/benefit analysis of Pilgrim.

Three Mile Island and Chernobyl have changed forever the way Americans think about nuclear power. The test of our national nuclear energy policy no longer lies in a comfortable consensus between the utility industry and the NRC. To survive, nuclear power must prove itself not just in the nation's capital but in Plymouth, Massachusetts, and other hometowns throughout America.

It is time for the federal government to stop listening only to experts and technocrats and to start listening to the American people. No policy will succeed until public confidence is restored in the technology and in the ability of government to manage it in the public interest.

Plant radiation presents hazard. . .

starting over with a new facility.

No reference was made to the whole plant becoming dangerously radioactive over that period, presenting a hazard both to workers and the public.

In the Feb. 1986 issue of Spectrum, the publication of the Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineers, a feature editorial faces the decommissioning issue more forthrightly.

The writer speaks of the "plight of nuclear power utilities.....Four decades into the nuclear power age, questions of how best to dismantle and dispose of a nuclear power plant remain largely unanswered".

"Engineers have three choices in dealing with a retired plant: dismantle it immediately" (which exposes workers to high levels of radiation); "put it on hold to let some of the radioactive materials decay and dismantle it later" (mothballing it for 30-50 years with an expensive security force around the clock); or lock it up for 100 years or more and declare it off bounds to the public."

In all three methods the radioactive spent fuel rods must first be removed to a high-level waste repository (which does not yet exist in our country, therefore requiring underwater storage somewhere on the plant site). The third option, called, interestingly enough, "entombment" involves filling the plant's structure with concrete to lock up the radioactivity inside.

This method promises "the least radiation exposure for workers and the public", but no one knows for sure that the radioactive elements will decay before the concrete container does. The Nuclear Regulatory Commission dislikes entombment as an option because some radioactive reactor elements have "long half lives" (they last a long, long time) and "you have to get those items out"

Letter

I offer these thoughts in the interest of informed dialog between nuclear power advocates and the public, especially those coastal communities most at risk downwind of Pilgrim I. One must wonder if we have started something we don't know how to stop.

Reflections from the harbor. . .

He added, the difficulty with implementing a coastal management plan is that there are two opposing factions in town; one group wants to keep a small colonial harbor, while the other wants a wall-to-wall marina.

"There are a lot of pros and cons," he said, "but I don't think the Town should get into the marina business. They'd be better off leasing it out to a private company."

Such a drastic change seems unlikely, but Ritter has worked to improve the present situation.

"I've taken satisfaction over the last three years in having established a night patrol," he said. "It took me quite a while to convince the advisory board that I needed it."

Aside from moorings, Ritter said he is responsible for tracking down overdue boats, helping boaters who have broken down, and assisting the Coast Guard in emergencies.

Ritter said, since he has been at the harbor's helm he has had to deal with several gruesome accidents.

"Over the years there have been four or five drownings and a couple of water skiing accidents, one fatal and the other nearly fatal.

"We've also lost three or four fishermen since I've been here," he said. "Fishing is a dangerous occupation."

Ritter was speaking from experience.

After serving in the Navy, Ritter spent 22 years as a lobster fisherman until his doctors told him to quit.

"I can't think of anything that's more of a strain on your back than fishing," he said. "It's a common ailment among fishermen."

Ritter recalled, "As a fisherman, I went through hurricanes that made the storm of 1978 seem mild by comparison."

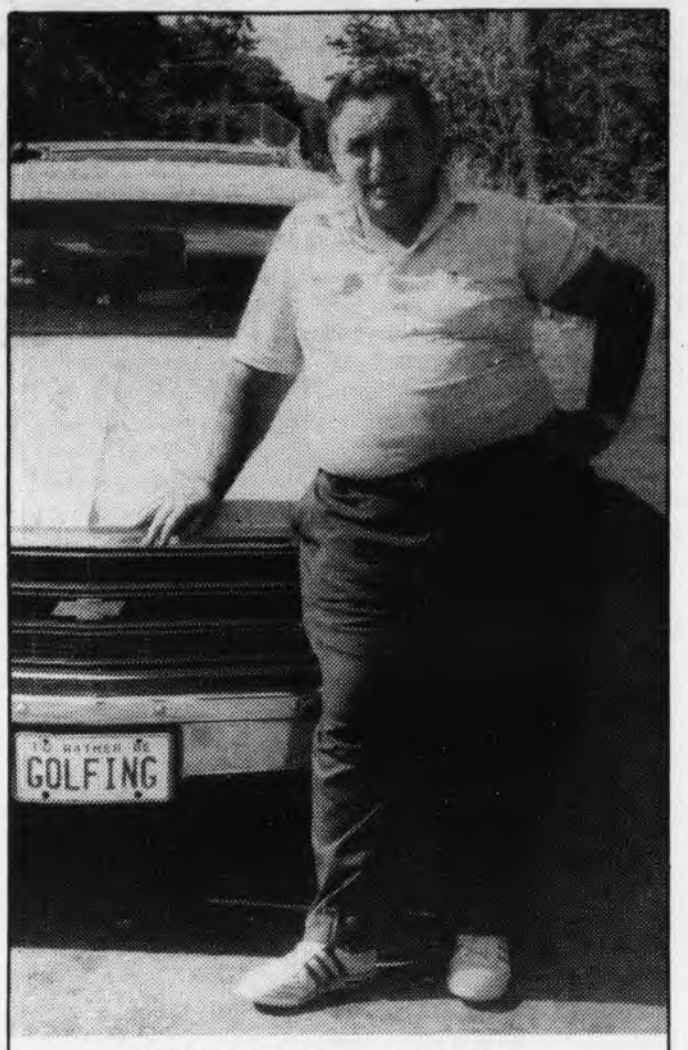
That blizzard though, was his toughest as harbormaster.

A couple of lobster boats broke loose in the icy harbor and had to be retrieved, but those were the least of his problems.

While trying to rebuild a breakwater, a barge carrying a truck loaded with 15 tons of riprap tipped over. "We had to take the riprap off the bottom, so it wouldn't be a menace to boaters."

Ritter said he considered Cohasset lucky that the tide was low when Hurricane Gloria hit last September. "That storm could have caused a lot of damage at high tide."

After weathering 48-hour weeks for 18 years, this "fixture" is ready to break loose and head for the links.



Harbormaster Harry Ritter

"A lot of times, people have seen me off during the week and said, "Doesn't that son of a bitch work?" Ritter said. "They don't realize I'm married to this place nights, weekends and holidays."

Though he'll be eligible for retirement July 29, Ritter said he will serve through the end of this boating season.

He added, "I hope to work along with the new harbormaster until things get squared away."

Although his replacement must have at least five years boating experience, Ritter explained, "A lot of this stuff is in a memory bank in my head, not on paper."

Art Center approaches goal

A major gift from the South Shore Playhouse Associates has pushed the South Shore Art Center's capital campaign drive up over the $500,000 mark, well on its way to meeting its $950,000 goal.

The $150,000 from the Playhouse Associates is a challenge grant to the Center to match the gift on a one-to-one basis.

Bruce Cameron, president of the Playhouse Associates, challenges the Art Center to match, through public support, the $150,000 on a one-to-one basis.

In accepting the gift, Mrs. N. Frank Neer Jr., chairman of the capital campaign committee, expressed the appreciation of the Center and called on contributions from the private sector and the business community to match this grant.

The capital campaign has been launched to raise the funds to build a new and better facility for the Art Center which has become a major educational and exhibiting facility for the visual arts on the South Shore. The new Art Center is to be located on Pleasant Street in Cohasset, just around the corner from the present location on Ripley Road.

The new 8,000 square foot facility will house four large studio/classrooms with better teaching facilities, a central two-story gallery space with professional exhibit lighting, a gallery/members room for community functins, an expanded gift shop to provide a professional outlet for local artists and craftspeople, more storage space and improved administrative offices.

Sand and sea art class

Painting the water will be the focus of a special Ann Murphy workshop "Painting Sand & Sea" offered by the South Shore Art Center.

The workshop will meet July 28, 30 and Aug. 1 from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. at the Center, 103 Ripley Road in Cohasset. Students will then go to the selected location to paint. The course is designed for those who have basic drawing and painting skills and would like to focus on the water. Oils, acrylic, watercolor or pastels may be used.

Murphy is a prize-winning exhibitor of marine paintings in Boston and on the South Shore. She has studied with Priscilla Sibley, Marshall Joyce, Roger Deering and William Ehrig. Her work is represented in many private and corporate collections.

Advanced registration is required for this workshop. Call the Center, 383-9548, for further information.

Alcohol conundrum, II: Is there anything we can do?

If I had any doubts that Duxbury teenagers are seriously into drinking, they were dispelled on the Fourth of July at a raucus party at which I was, by my best guess, the second oldest of about 200 guests. It was one of those parties to which many were invited and many more crashed. It was a well-run party; the host is a young entrepreneur whom I predict will go far.

But I was shocked at the number of very intoxicated teenagers I saw. There were boys picking fights with other boys and gunning cars they shouldn't have had the keys to. There were girls screaming at boys over some perceived affront, every other word escaping beginning with an "f." There were public pukers and public urinaters and a couple of people publicly passed out on the ground.

Moreover, much of the conversation I overheard was about drugs. A Duxbury High School sophomore boasted of his use of L.S.D., mescaline, peyote, cocaine, and pot. And so it went. The evening came to a fitting climax when I got to talking with a young man about the tides. He asserted that South Shore tides run three hours behind Boston tides. I informed him the difference is a matter of minutes, not hours. Unable to convince me of his view, he started to rock from side to side in that particularly stupid way that drunks looking to pick a fight do, then pushed me over in my chair.

As I no longer return absurdities I laughed the matter off. The young man — his name is James Williams — spent the rest of the evening trying to provoke others who wouldn't agree with his unusual understanding of the tides. He is a particularly handsome boy and I give his name fondly and in the recollection of a few foolish nights of my own in the hope that if he sees his name in the paper perhaps he will learn at a young age what some people never learn: how very ugly and unattractive we can become when we are drunk.

What I observed in Duxbury over the Fourth brought to mind the phrase of my colleague the Rev. Darrell Berger, who once called Scituate an "alcoholic town." In the true sense of the term "alcoholic" Darrell was being inaccurate because addiction is a necessarily individual affliction. But alcohol consumption does vary from place to place, and used non-technically "alcoholic town" raises valid questions: Is alcohol a bigger part of the culture in Duxbury than elsewhere on the South Shore? Is it a bigger factor on the suburban South Shore than elsewhere in society?

These questions are unanswerable; yet it is one of democracy's delicious qualities that any fool may hold an opinion about the unanswerable. Mine is: maybe, but probably not, for, unfortunately, the party scene described above repeats itself every Saturday night throughout Greater Boston.

But my allowance that there could be more alcohol consumption hereabouts is based on two factors. The first is that from Hull to Duxbury all the coastal towns were, from late in the last century on, places where people went to relax and have fun. Whether it was for the weekend or for the summer, people went to Nantasket or the Glades or Brant Rock or Standish Shore to get away from it all, and naturally in a great many instances, to party. Now that so many one-time summer people have settled on the South Shore permanently, it shouldn't be surprising if vacation drinking habits have found their way into the culture.

The second reason there may be slightly more drinking on the South Shore than elsewhere is also related to the fact that we are a region a great many people have moved into in the last quarter century. For many newcomers the move to the South Shore represents a crowning achievement in a rapid rise in status. Whether they have come from one of Boston's neighborhoods or from an entirely different part of the United States, nearly all newcomers are delighted to be living on the South Shore.

But many are insecure as well, and that is where drinking comes in. Often people who are insecure about their status in their new environment cope with their tension by drinking too much. When they cope with insecurity by drinking the deleterious effect on their children can manifest itself in three ways.

First, children tend to internalize their parents' social insecurity, resentfully wondering if they are as acceptable as their apparently well-established neighbors. Secondly, children imitate their parents' use of alcohol as a way of coping. Thirdly, parents who are preoccupied with their status are likely to be insensitive to the signs that their children are in trouble, for it is awfully hard for the human mind to give full concentration to two things at the same time. When on top of that parents are half sloshed all weekend the likelihood of their noticing the signs that their children are drinking plummets further.

I do not, however, mean to imply that either native-born or non-drinking parents are off the hook. Success, ambition, business, busyness, and other normal adult preoccupations can play the same role as drinking to excess in rendering parents into deaf blind mutes where the troubles of their adolescent children are concerned.

The signs of trouble, often deliberately concealed by an ashamed kid, are terribly easy to miss, the more so because the onset of trouble can be so sudden. In the teenage years time flies, and it can take nothing more than a perceived failure or a broken romance for a cheerful, productive boy or girl to get depressed. Then, when alcohol, drugs, cars and peer pressure are mixed together with naturally careening adolescent emotions, the possibility for sudden tragedy is ever-present.

Is there anything that can be done to avert these tragedies? With respect to the true alcohol addict the answer is one I am not qualified to give. How do we recognize the signs of alcoholism sooner and how do we help people deal with their problem before they have paid a terrible price? One hopes civilization will make progress in answering those questions, but how so is beyond my ken or purpose here.

But I do have some beliefs about the problem of teenage drinking, which, even setting the teenage alcoholic aside, is obviously out of hand to literally tragic proportions. I believe the remedy, or rather the beginning of an approach to a partial remedy, can be distilled to a single word: toil.

It is sometimes suggested that children in upwardly mobile suburban communities don't get enough love. Except in pathological cases I believe that is quite wrong. But while loved, our children are not needed — they are not materially indispensable — in the way children were when there was a farm to run or a fishing boat to tend to. In that sense kids have neither importance, nor turf, nor necessary toil.

Their parents, by contrast, are on a roll. In our strong economy most men and many women have interesting careers in which they are doing better and better. But their kids are left to contrast the high-achievement world all about them with their own adolescent view of themselves as an unneeded adjunct to suburban society. Consider the depth of self-denigration in the graffito I came across recently at an adolescent hang-out: "There's no future, there's only rock and roll."

Yes, there is rock and roll, and unfortunately, there also is alcohol; and rather like that other deterritorialized being, the American Indian, the suburban adolescent too often feels he has nothing better to do than get drunk with his friends.

There is no quick fix for such a perception, but I think toil gets to the heart of the problem because toil (by which I mean a paid job) means the beginning of self-reliance. Toil means identity. Toil means pride. Toil points to the future. Toil teaches. And for the non-alcoholic kid who is amenable to learning the necessary lessons, toil is a great teacher about alcohol; for the kid who has to get up and go to work in the morning soon learns that if he drinks the night before he pays a price.

In my view the most important thing parents of adolescent children can do is to practice noticing things and keeping communication vital and open. After that in importance is to insist that any child 16 or over hold a summer job — concomitantly insisting that if there exists the desire to drive, the family car will not do. The necessary car shall be purchased for the kid by the kid — He will learn to take care much more quickly when the investment at risk is his own. Then it should be made clear that if there is ever a drinking and driving incident the kid's car will go up on blocks for a year. Finally, all parents should agree to the excellent compact suggested by Mothers Against Driving Drunk: that any time a child is confronted with an impaired driver, he or she may call home and the parent will come fetch the kid no matter the place or hour or circumstances.

If I were the parent of a recently deceased child I might resent what I've just written, for life, as President Kennedy said, is unfair. Sometimes an accident is just an accident. Most of the students in Duxbury who lost their lives in the last two years held jobs, they were not alcohol abusers, nor were their families. They were well-adjusted, popular students, and in a couple of cases, excellent athletes. They were most of them just at the wrong place at the wrong time, and so it was when I was that age: the most normal, level-headed, fun kid in Duxbury was the one who was taken. I still miss him after nearly 25 years.

There is obviously no simple, efficient, or total solution to the problem at hand. But I do think that we need to put some thought into how we go about making kids productive sooner in their lives — of inventing some modern suburban version of the family farm. If we can do that (and in this economy and with the brainpower that abounds in Massachusetts I think we can) I think it will help give young lives a purpose beyond the ingestion of alcohol.

Lauren Lydon creates artwork for her antique prints

By Jane Lane
Mariner Staff

Lauren Lydon at her new Elm Street shop, The Print Room, shows off her 18th and 19th century prints. (Kathy Madden photo)

It actually began in a spare room in her Scituate home. What began as a childhood interest and hobby has now evolved into a fulltime profession.

Lauren Lydon simply outgrew that second floor spare room. Her artistry is no longer a way to occupy her spare hours. Lydon is now a fulltime professional working in Cohasset.

There are precious few spare hours.

There are surprisingly few people knowledgeable in this specialized area of art. A sign outside her Elm Street, Cohasset store states simply "The Print Room - specializing in 18th and 19th century prints and botanicals."

Lydon, who lives on Sunset Road in Scituate, explained that the name of her shop is taken directly from her favorite antique book store in London, England. That is where she uncovers the most rare and unusual prints which she later converts into her beautifully framed artwork.

Her artwork consists of purchasing 18th and 19th century illustrations. Taking the print from an antique, but damaged book, she will have a special matte cut. She will then create a specialized design on that matte and then frame the print accordingly.

The finished product is an antique, one-of-a-kind work of art, uniquely displayed within a specialized frame.

"I'll never use a print from a perfect book," Lydon emphasized. "I'll only take the illustrations from damaged books. But the illustration itself is always in perfect condition."

Lydon, who as a child was always pouring over antique illustrations, admired their unusual lines, forms and colors. She did not attend art school, but settled down to marriage and children. Yet, she explained, her interest in art, color and illustrations, never faded.

"I started buying prints for myself," she said. "I would go to auctions and antique shops and I'd buy them just for myself. It was strictly a personal thing at first. But when I started to decorate my house with them, friends asked me to do some for them. It was all word of mouth. Within a short time, I started a small business right from my home."

As more friends purchased the prints, the word quickly spread to professional interior decorators. They made appointments to view the prints in her Scituate home.

"Pretty soon, I was having three appointments a week. My house was filled with the prints I was trying to do for all these customers. The spare room was filled, and the prints would be lying all over the floor of the livingroom so the customers could see them. It overtook the entire house and disrupted everything. It was definitely time to find an available office area."

That space was available at 95 Elm Street in Cohasset Harbor, across from Kimball's By The Sea.

Overlooking the water of Cohasset Harbor, The Print Room has a definite English tea room flavor. Pastel pink walls and a green carpet are delightfully accompanied by antiques and a green and white chinz sofa and armchair.

"I want everyone to feel free to enter The Print Room and browse," Lydon said. "I don't want anyone to feel they have to come in here and purchase something. If they need my assistance, I'm here. But I don't want to be pushing a sale down anyone's throat."

To accommodate a demanding family life, Lydon has limited the hours of the shop to Thursdays, 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. and 6 to 10 p.m.; Fridays through Sunday, 10 a.m. to 3 p.m.

The artist explained the illustrations are of things natural - plants, animals and human figures. Botanicals are a large portion of her current work.

Lydon noted all her prints are 18th and 19th century because after that time, all book illustrations were photographs or copies of original work. The prints Lydon uses were created more than 100 years ago for a specific novel or textbook.

After she selects the illustration, she has an acid-free matte cut for a specific size. Sometimes, for a special elegant effect, she paints the inside border with gold leaf paint.

Then, with a special marbled paper, she creates a design that will border the matte. This may be a simple half-inch border outlining the print, or it may be a more intricate design.

The marbled paper, Lydon explained, is sent to her each month from an artist in New Jersey. This woman, she said, paints the marbeled design specifically for the inside of leather-bound books. The unique design of the paper, the exceptional quality and the unusual variety of colors are the reasons Lydon will only accept the work of this particular artist.

"Using this type of design for a print matte is a very English, very European way of framing an illustration," she noted.

The frames are selected by Lydon to coordinate and tie-in the colors of the illustration, the matte and the finished framework. The result is an individual, antique piece of artwork suitable for any room of the house.

"I have my artwork hanging in very contemporary homes filled with cathedral ceilings and glass. One of my best customers has a very old home filled with antiques. I love this art because it really does coordinate with every type of home design," she explained.

Prices of the individualized illustrations range in price from affordable to downright expensive. Lydon explained that a particular two-print set within the shop is a 1795 illustration by the artist Bolton. It is a rare color print of a bird and the bird's nest with eggs. "It's very difficult to find this set in perfect condition, and all together," she said. The price of the framed print set is $300.

"Chances are," Lydon said, "you won't find another illustration like the ones I sell anywhere else in the world."

The Scituate artist does the bulk of her browsing and buying in England. "There's just so much more to see in Europe. I go to England," she explained, "because I can't speak a foreign language. And I really have to bargain with the book dealers. I'm not bold enough to go into a foreign land and bargain with a store owner. But that's the next thing I'll tackle."

In addition to the rare prints, The Print Shop contains antique needlework, tapestry, pillows and rugs. "It's really a little antique shop," she said.

And if a customer has a pre-selected illustration, Lydon will create a specialized matte and frame for that particular artwork.

"I have the customer select whatever illustration I have or one they have," she said. "Then sometimes they like to bring in a swatch of fabric from the room they are decorating. We'll select the paper and frame for the particular print."

Lydon is excited about this budding business on Cohasset's waterfront. "Everyday I see the momentum building," she said. "It's especially nice during the summer when people are walking along and stop in to chat. Many people are not aware of this type of artwork, but once they see it, they love it!"

A Stone's Throw — by Paul Steven Stone

The far side of romance

Two years ago, she wouldn't have given him a second thought. But now she's 36 years old, and statistically she has a better chance of dying in a plane crash than finding a husband. So when he leans over and asks, "Like to access my data file?" she ignores the desire to cringe, and tries to smile.

She's a personnel manager with two younger married sisters. He's a systems analyst with no discernible social skills. At best, it's a match made on a very desperate day in heaven.

Fingering his gold chains, he winks and coyly asks, "You programmed for a little binary processing?"

She feels cramped for space, and looks around at the other women in the bar. Usually she sees them as competitors, but now they seem more like fellow victims of a bitterly cruel joke. And this is the punch line, all dressed up in polyester and computer jargon.

"Sorry," she finally says, "I'm waiting for someone." Almost immediately, she feels the relief surging up.

He moves his attack down the bar, to the next weak link in the enemy's defense. While she just sits there. Waiting for someone.

Someone her mother once told her about.

Plymouth orchestra runs into problems

Letters

To the Editor:

I wish to publicy acknowledge the members of the 1985-86 Board of Directors of the Plymouth Philharmonic Orchestra who voluntarily rolled up their sleeves and put in a year of unprecedented hard work and dedication to the organization.

They met more often and for longer amounts of time in anyone's memory to tackle several very, very serious problems:

1. The Board developed a new set of bylaws succinctly defining the purpose and goals of the Orchestra and the responsibilities of those who function within it. These new bylaws conformed to the laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts for non-profit organizations and brought the antiquated, incomplete and contradictory bylaws up to present day corporate standards.

2. The Orchestra faced a $15,000 deficit this year and its year-end report showed a loss of $10,000 in anticipated ticket sales. The Board undertook a scrutinizing, in-depth review of the 1986-87 budget and matched belt-tightening measures with plans for aggressive fundraising that would balance the budget within two years.

A number of administrative and fiscal inconsistencies had to be corrected and the Board, recognizing and accepting its fiscal responsibility, set up a system of checks and balances.

3. This past year the Orchestra saw public resistance to the six concert series, declining attendance and complaints of homogeneous programming. The Board responded by dropping back to four concerts next season and developing a diverse series of concerts that would be artistically challenging to our talented musicians, yet more familiar and appealing to our audiences. We strongly recommended upbeat encores at each performance as a gesture of gratitude to concert go'ers.

This Board of accomplished and recognized business and professional leaders volunteered hours of expertise and enthusiasm to all Board matters, special events, attendance at concerts and influencing friends, neighbors, co-workers and business associates to support the Orchestra.

They are to be commended for their commitment, hard work, and loyalty to the goals of the Orchestra in spite of resistance from the paid staff.

Unfortunately, all but one of these good people has resigned. They are: Rosemary Carroll, President; David Cobb, Vice President; E. Richard Rothmund, Vice President; Burke Leahey, Vice President; Shirley McCall, Secretary/Clerk; Linda Kennedy, Treasurer; Francis C. Rogerson Jr., Assistant Treasurer; David J. Buckman, David W. Ellis, Edward Floyd, Susan M. Gallitano, Joseph Walsh, Loretta LaRoche, Barbara Leahey, Frankland W. Miles, Ian S. Oppenheim, Jordan Prouty, Dr. Raymond Russo, Edward Santos, Dr. Samuel K. Stewart, Kenneth Tavares.

At the Annual Meeting of the Corporation on June 19, the Board Members present—with one exception—resigned en masse facing an apparent hostile takeover by a group who had paid $5 donations to gain eligibility to vote in their slate of officers and members, and to support undisclosed objectives.

This new group, by voting dominance, indicated they wished to take on the challenges of the deficit, wanning attendance, revitalized musical programming and community acceptance.

While the former Board remains appalled at the affrontery of this new group, it remains committed to the ideal that local musicians should have an orchestra in which to perform and that area residents should have the opportunity for the musical enrichment and entertainment that a community orchestra offers.

Rosemary Carroll
Former President

Med Flight helicopter aids rescue victims

By Bob Briggs
Mariner Correspondent

A five car accident occurs on Route 3 in Plymouth leaving ten people injured, two with serious burns. Medical officials at nearby Jordan Hospital are faced with a dilemma: how can they deal with all of the injuries, especially the burn victims?

A couple years ago officials would have had to contact the Coast Guard or police to try and get a helicopter to transport seriously injured people to where they could receive the care they needed.

Now they have the option of calling Boston Med Fight. Since it began operations June 26, 1985, the east coast based critical care helicopter service has transported hundreds of patients.They use anMBB-BK 117 twin engine helicopter which flies at a speed of 150 miles per hour and has a range of 350 miles.

Med Flight is a 24-hour, seven-day-a-week service designed to transport critically ill and injured patients from hospital to hospital as well as from an accident scene that cannot be easily reached by ground transportation. The service is able to respond to an emergency medical call in less than five minutes.

Already in use in many other states, the initiative to create helicopter services came from the Committee on Trauma of the American College of Surgeons in 1980.

They recommended that the state needed two medical helicopter services. The first, which covers the western part of the state, began operation in 1983. Called Life Flight, and stationed in Worcester, the service is managed by the UMass Medical Center.

Boston Med Flight was the creation of a consortium of eight Boston hospitals. Brigham and Womens, Beth Israel, Eye and Ear, Boston City, Mass General, University, Childrens and the New England Medical Center are co-sponsors of the program.

Through the availability of Med Flight, the consortium hopes to better the regional approach in the provision of health care by offering a safe and rapid method of transportation to advanced medical services.

Med Flight serves two main purposes depending upon the capabilities of or the availability of space at the nearest hospitals.

According to Dr. Martin Roche, Director of Emergency Services at the South Shore Hospital in Weymouth, the main need for Med Flight in his area would be during a disaster situation in which the resulting number of patients would be too much for the hospital to deal with effectively. Med Flight would be used to "evacuate patients to a place where they could receive aid."

The Jordan Hospital in Plymouth has used the service approximately 25 to 30 times over the year. In their case, the helicopter is usually brought in to transfer "patients with spinal cord injuries or injuries requiring neurosurgery," according to Dr. Arthur Gorman, Chief of Emergency Services at Jordon.

Patients suffering from multiple trauma or severe burns are also likely candidates for emergency transfer through the Med Flight program.

"The helicopter Med Flight uses can hold two patients simultaneously and has room for three medical people," said Med Flight nurse Diane Chartier. "But," Chartier added "they always have to take the total weight into consideration," The total weight of the load can have an effect on the speed of the helicopter.

The usual transfer includes the pilot, the patient, a nurse and a medic. The men and women who man the Med Flight helicopter are a special group of people.

According to Nurse Chartier, applicants must first "fulfill many high requirements and then go through two months of rigorous training before they can assume a position with Med Flight."

The training received is in the areas of pre-hospital stabilization, critical care emergency medicine and aviation physiology. The pilots are specially trained to be attuned to the needs of medical flights.

The quality of health care certainly does not diminish upon takeoff. The helicopter is equipped like a mini intensive care unit with highly sophisticated medical equipment and over 60 available medications. This coupled with the fact that the nurses and medics are top notch are the main advantages of the program, according to Dr. Gorman.

Better equipped than ambulances, "the helicopter is staffed with exceptionally qualified people who know how to use the special machinery."

Med Flight can get a patient from Jordan to Boston in a flight time of about 12 minutes. Even the fastest ambulance will take 40-45 minutes. That extra half hour could be the difference between life and death.

Med Flight is available to anyone who calls them. Dr. Roche says this is especially important to towns on the South Shore and Cape Cod that do not have paramedic capabilities. Since it started up a year ago, Med Flight has been very active, receiving, on the average, two calls a day.

If the service receives a call for aid after the helicopter has already left on another call, Life Flight serves as a backup. With its ability to go 350 miles, Med Flight also serves as a backup for Life Flight.

The introduction of Med Flight to eastern Massachusetts has brought a much needed service to this part of the state. Studies show that adequate, on the scene treatment and prompt transfer to a critical care facility can increase survival chances by up to 25 percent. Med Flight is another tool that the medical world can use to make our lives a little safer.

Dinner & theatre act at Christos II was well worth it

By Claire McDonough and Betty Sill

THEATRE REVIEW

If you're looking for a way to beat the heat this summer, Christos II Dinner Theatre is one of the best bets on the South Shore.

Thursday, July 10, the theatre opened with a performance of "Not Now Darling," a British farce in two acts, and the audience loved every minute of it.

The food was better than at most dinner theatres, and the choices: roast beef, chicken cordon bleu, and baked schrod, were all served hot and well prepared, accompanied by an ordinary fruit cup and acceptable potatos and peas.

The specialty, however, was Christo's famous Greek salad, guaranteed to put any theatre-goer in a good mood. All in all, the service was excellent and the meal was rounded off with ice cream, strawberries, and really excellent coffee.

Delightful though the meal was, it was the play that was the thing. The plot was trite—two men were partners in a furrier firm. One was unmarried and prissy, the other a married roue. The latter wishes to present a married lady of easy virtue with a 5,000 lb. fur coat. He sells it to her husband for 500 lbs. and pays the balance himself. The husband tells his wife nothing about the coat, and presents it to his secretary.

When the philanderer's wife notices the withdrawal from their bank account, she becomes suspicious, but her husband convinces her that he loaned the money to his partner so he can present the coat to a lady of his choice.

Sound confusing? The second act is even more so. Scantily-clad ladies hide in closets, clothes are tossed out windows, wives, husbands and significant others are deceived, and marriages and assignations are planned with a tempo that is truly head-spinning.

Although the plot may have been less than profound, the play itself was so well acted that it was downright hilarious. Hingham's Jim Leonard, always at his best in British comedy, added humor with his impeccable sense of timing.

An outstanding performance was given by Skip Moloney as Arnold Crouch (the virtuous partner). He provided cohesion with a volatile performance and superb wit.

The supporting cast was also excellent, each member handing in a professional performance.

Coming attractions include "Suitehearts," billed as "The hilarious adult comedy" by the authors of "Love, Sex and the I.R.S." and "Having a Wonderful Time, Wish you Were Her" and "Cole", an evening of Cole Porter music.

If Thursday's performance was typical, both will play to a packed house.

Coat of Arms

Ratcliffe

What's in a name?

By Frank Keady
Special to the Mariner

Modern day political prisoners might find some comfort in the fact that they don't have to suffer the fate of the colonial rebel Philip Ratcliffe. He was sentenced in 1631 to have his ears cut off for making "malicious speeches" against the Massachusetts authorities, who were headed by John Winthrop.

Ratcliffe and Radchiffe are two of the many spelling variants of the name meaning "red cliff." The prefixes "rad," "rat," and "red" were used in Medieval England to describe the reddish color of sandstone, which is found throughout the country. "Clyf" was used to mean a rough stone, as well as cliff.

Some families took their names from the towns of Radclive, Ratclyffe, and Redliff Hill in England. The various spellings of the name have intermingled so thoroughly that it is now difficult to distinquish between different forms. Records dating back to 1182 show the spelling as Radecliwa, Radeclyf, and Racclyff.

Robert Ratchiff, first of the name in America, arrived in 1623 on a tiny boat that carried only 60 passengers. They voyage across the Atlantic was so dangerous in these little ships that few were brave enough to make the trip. A writer of the period noted that some of the people watching the ships leave England expressed their opinion that the travelers were "cract-branes."

Philip Ratcliffe, the unfortunate rebel who lost his ears, was next of the name to arrive. He lived in the Marblehead colony for only a year, since his sentence included banishment from the settlement. What happened to him after he left is not recorded.

Many titles were borne by the Radcliffes throughout English history. They were Earls of Newburgh, Sussex, and Derwent as well as Knights of Ordshall. Sixteen coats of arms were granted to the name, and the one illustrated is the most ancient, having been granted at a time when shields were very simple.

If you would like a history of your family name and a facsimile of your coat of arms, please send $3, plus self-addressed envelope: IS THIS YOU, P.O. Box 807, Westwood, MA 02090.

Arrangements can be made for a full color reproduction.

The Dragon's Dungeon — By Claire McDonough

A surge of gladness to see K of C carnival

"Isn't it wonderful?" I enthused. "I saw all the carnival wagons parked on the Scituate Driftway. It must be carnival time again."

The Dragon looked startled. "That's the first time I ever heard you say that in your life. You always complained for three weeks before the carnival got here and for seven weeks after it left."

"Complain about the carnival?" I said. "Moi? How did I do that?

"How?" he repeated. "Let me count the ways. You said you'd rather just give a donation to the K of C, because then you wouldn't also have to wash the kids' clothes afterward.

"You also went through years trying not to let the kids know you were afraid of heights. So when they were still too young to go on some of the rides by themselves you always took them on the ferris wheel."

Just the memory made me unwell. "I'd rather not think about that one. My knuckles used to stay white for the next 48 hours."

He nodded. "I remember one year when you got stuck at the top for over a half hour. You told me later that the only thing that kept you from being very ill was the knowledge that the man in the gondola below was a complete stranger, and that some time the ride would be over and you'd have to face him."

"That," I snapped at him, "was because you told me of a similar experience you had the year before. It still doesn't mean I don't like the carnival. How about the marvelous aromas? Fried dough, pizza, corn on the cob, cotton candy, corn dogs, taffy?"

"Sure," he agreed. "But you only enjoyed the smells before you rode the ferris wheel. After that, they had a decidedly unpleasant effect."

I nodded. "I'd forgotten about that. Still, there was the excitement of the music, and of seeing so many people in a good mood, and there was the thrill of the games."

"Right," the Dragon agreed. "The games our kids always spent a fortune at. They never won any of the big prizes, but for months after a carnival we kept tripping over those stuffed snakes."

"I always wanted to win a buffalo," I admitted. "But at least the games were fun."

"Some of them were," the Dragon conceded. "But how about the time they had a game involving a live mouse? You went completely whacko running around trying to find someone from the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to animals because 'the poor dear little thing is frightened out of its mind'—and you hate mice."

"This one looked like Mickey," I told him. "It had round ears. And the fireworks were always fun."

"While we were watching them, they were," he nodded. "But they used to scare the dogs out of their wits and we'd spend two nights with two very large dogs trying to climb into bed with us for comfort and protection. You used to yell at them to go away, but they were much more afraid of the fireworks than they were of you, and anyway, once they were on top of us they had us pinned and we couldn't do anything to make them leave. Two very hot summer nights," he recalled.

"I think you're winning this argument," I told him. "Now that I think back, most of my memories of carnivals involve discomfort or nausea. But nevertheless, when I saw the wagons on the Driftway I felt a surge of gladness."

The Dragon shook his head. "I can't think why."

"Because," I told him triumphantly, "it occurred to me that not only are our kids all old enough to go by themselves, they're also old enough to bring our grandkids.

"This year we can stay home and ignore the whole thing."

"If you can," he said doubtfully. "Frankly I'm not sure I'll be able to ignore two large trembling dogs stretched on top of me for two hot July nights."

Kickoff drive begins for homeless shelter

MainSpring House, the South Shore shelter for the homeless, recently announced the kickoff of a $25,000 capital drive to help pay off the mortgage on the new addition to the 70-bed Brockton shelter.

Marie Sheehan, chairman of the board at MainSpring, has appointed the Jack Conway Company to head up the drive which will be completed no later than Labor Day.

Last year the Jack Conway Company headed up a $50,000 capital drive to retire the second mortgage at MainSpring.

"We worked directly with the South Shore and Greater Brockton business community in this fundraising effort and they have been so generous," stated Tom Rudolph, administrative vice president of the Jack Conway Company.

"Our drive got off to a good start a few weeks ago when we raised $5,000 at the Second Annual MainSpring House Golf Tournament held at the Pembroke Country Club," Rudolph noted.

Marie Sheehan said the new addition at MainSpring House creates a special floor for young mothers and their children who are trying to make the transition between homelessness and independence.

NEARLY NATIVE — by DARRELL BERGER

'Meditations of a Little League coach'

By Darrell Berger
Special to the Mariner

There I was on the pitching mound, my infield poised behind me. I was confident I could overpower or outfox every hitter who faced me. Though some balls had been hit hard that day, no runs had scored. But now I faced the day's biggest challenge.

The burley third baseman stood in the righthand batter's box, his bat held straight up. I knew that, like many power hitters, you could "jam" him successfully.

That is, he had trouble hitting a pitch thrown in on his fists. He would likely swing and miss.

But I also knew I had to throw the ball very hard. If it wasn't fast enough, he'd turn on it and pound a solid hit to the outfield, perhaps over the outfielder's head.

This was a dilemma. Should I throw my best fastball? He'd probably miss, but I might miss, too. I might hit him.

I threw it inside, but not nearly as hard as I could. He pulverized it.

What kind of decision had I made, you might ask. That kind of thinking would get a Red Sox pitcher a one way ticket to Pawtucket.

I made the decision because I happened to be pitching batting practice to my Little League team. The third baseman was 12 years old.

He was one of the better hitters in our league. I'd try to challenge the boys who had more talent or experience. I threw harder to them, tried to find their weaknesses or fool them by changing speeds. This made them better hitters.

The younger boys, or those with little experience or ability, I tried to make better by boosting their confidence. I tried to find their strengths, tried to make my pitches hit their bats.

So each hitter was a challenge. Not the challenge one finds in Fenway Park, but not entirely different, either. Baseball is baseball.

A few years ago I would have thrown as hard as I could to the third baseman. If I had hit him, and he had grabbed his side in pain, I would have said something like, "Shake it off, it's part of the game," while knowing inside I couldn't bear to be less than completely competitive, regardless of circumstances.

A lot of men are like that, especially those involved with sports. We try as hard as we can to win. We know the price you have to pay to win. After awhile you can't turn it off, and you end up drilling a kid in the ribs during batting practice.

Now I've changed. Maybe it's only middle age but I like to think I've learned a lesson. Some guys never learn.

The road to winning is not always traveled best at full throttle.

Winning isn't everything.

Life is not a game.

We invent games and rules so we can banish some of the ambiguity from our lives. But life itself is too rich, too complex. Making life into a game diminishes it.

All of which is hard to explain to a 12-year-old pitcher who has just lost the final playoff game.

The season was a series of time dilations. Now I am pitching batting practice, throwing the ball around, one of the boys.

Then practice is over and they are still 12 years old, but I have to go back to being 37 years old.

During the game, they hit and run and field with joyous intensity. They perform miraculously: score from second on a passed ball, make unassisted double-plays, hit a homer in the final inning to win the game.

Then a foul tip hits my catcher on his wrist and he is shocked, starts to cry. "What?" I think. "My catcher's crying? How can this be?" Then I am brought back to reality. My catcher is ten.

We all wanted to win, worked together to win. Most of the time we did. Winning is better than losing. We accomplished something together, found out about ourselves.

I wonder if the boys will ever know how much they gave me?

I no longer had to be blindly competitive. I could use baseball as a means of teaching higher skills: concentration, cooperation, the proper care and not the over-feeding of the ego.

I became aware of how open the kids were, how eager to take in what we showed them.

And what we showed them was not just how to play, but how to respond to the vicissitudes of life. Dare I say in this day and age we showed them, just a little maybe, how to be a man?

Did we succeed? What values, what behaviors did we want to pass along, and which did they take with them? What errors did we make and why?

Baseball is a game of relentless failure and endless waiting, where skill and virtue are only periodically rewarded. It is a game, it has been said, designed to break your heart.

We play it and pass it down because it amplifies the subtle truths and delivers us from time.

The boys play it as a premonition of what they might become. We coach it as a remembrance of what we were or might have been. The generations meet and for an instant, understand.

(Darrell Berger is minister of the First Parish Unitarian Church in Scituate.)

Sullivan's accessibility an asset to community

By Jane Lane
Mariner Staff

Her campaign in 1985 was based on accessibility, visibility, and a commitment to take a firm stand on all issues. Selectman Diane Sullivan feels in the past year and a half, she has delivered on those promises.

And standing by her resolution to publically state her position on all issues, Sullivan readily replied to a question regarding re-election.

"Yes," she answered without hestitation. "I will be running again in April. I think the voters have a right to know that now."

The selectman was elected chairman of the board at last week's meeting. It was a position she accepted after nomination from the other three members of the board.

Sullivan replaced former selectmen chairman Mary Jane McArthur who resigned last month from the board. Coincidentally, Sullivan is now serving the final two years of an unexpired term of former member John DeBassio.

"When I was nominated for chairman, I wouldn't refuse it. I put in a lot of time now anyway," she said. "And Cliff (Mitman) couldn't be chairman because of his business commitments. Rocky (Laugelle) would prefer not to be chairman, and Jimmy (Gallagher) just came on the board. It made sense. I'm available. I can work with the executive secretary every Thursday on the agenda - to make sure we have all the back-up material we need so we can make a decision the following Monday night."

Sullivan said her availability during the daytime proved an asset. During the gigantically successful casting call at the Deer Hill School, Sullivan with help from Laugelle, requested four additional police officers to control the increasing crowd.

"Rocky was the one who realized that the two officers who were assigned would not be enough," she recalled. "So I went to the police station and requested the additional help. That's the type of situation where the chairman can help. And it's easier because I'm usually in town."

Sullivan works in-town as a realtor and a justice of the peace. Both positions allow her to be home much of the time with her son, Jason, 8, and at the town hall for official business.

Much of the time at home, she admitted, is spent on the telephone. "My son," Sullivan laughed, "is very good at writing down notes while I'm on the Wind whipped a new idea for unique Rte 3A sign

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

As many motorists whiz down Route 3A through Cohasset, they can be seen doing double-takes as their eyes are drawn off the road to one sign that stands out from the flashing field of neon and the clutter of characters.

It's a huge kitchen cabinet hanging from a pole.

The unusual business beacon was the brain child of Richard Green, who manages The Green Gage Plum, his family's antique shop near the Scituate line.

"When we started the business 11 years ago," he said, "we had a sign up there and it was a nice sign, but it was hard to read. We found, through the years, there were people that lived in the town, natives who didn't even know we were here.

"So in November 1984, when a strong wind in a storm took the sign down, we decided we needed a new one."

Green said he went out to check the prices of signs, but didn't like the "ordinary" signs he was seeing.

"I had always pictured a cupboard up there," he said, "because it speaks for itself."

He explained, his mother Mary has always liked country antiques, so the idea for the sign was to reflect country primitives.

"We love cupboards," Mrs. Green said.

"Yeah, we love cupboards," he agreed, "and I couldn't see just putting up a flat sign with a name on it. I think this sign would speak for itself even if it didn't have any lettering on it."

Although The Green Gage Plum features more than country style antiques, Green said the cupboard is the perfect icon for his family's enterprise.

He described his design and how he got the 600-pound cupboard up on its pole.

"It's bigger than it looks," he explained, "it's five-feet by eight-feet, which is the limit of what they let me have.

"It's not a working piece of furniture," he added, "All the shelves are slanted to drain water, and it's two-sided. It was made specifically to be a sign.

"If we had just put a regular cupboard up there, we'd get water inside. It's also sealed so we don't get any nests inside."

Green explained, the sign is held aloft by half-inch steel chains bolted into a steel plate on one end and on the other, a post of hard pine which has

Health board working to alleviate violations

The state confirmed this week the board of health is making a "good faith effort" to alleviate the nine violations cited at the Cedar Street landfill.

The state Department of Environmental Quality Engineering (DEQE) compiled a list of nine "serious" violations observed at the landfill during a June 10 inspection.

The local board received a copy of those violations July 16. DEQE has received the reply "and based on the reponse, we feel Cohasset is making a good faith effort. But we will reinspect the landfill at a later date and hold further discussions with the board," spokesman Bonnie Sashin said.

Among the violations cited by the state are: inadequate supervision of the landfill operation, salvaged materials are not removed from the site on a weekly basis, and the facility is not being operated in accordance with the approved plans.

.The notice of violation also stated "the above violations are contributing to leachate pollution of groundwater wetlands and causing a public health nuisance."

DEQE spokesman Sashin explained, "it is serious, sure, although it is not an imminent public health threat. It is a nuisance in that our number one priority is to protect our water resources.

"Something like (the violation) insufficient intermediate cover to prevent percolation of water into the fill and final cover to support vegetation, is serious. A lot of community landfills are operated like this, which causes rainwater to fall into the refuse and form leachate. That is not good. Other violations cited by the state are more esthetic than health problems."

The spokesman said the numerous violations resulted in the state's decision that Cohasset's municipal landfill is not being adequately supervised.

"We looked at all the violations," Sashin said. "And we had to infer that the landfill was not being operated properly."

The Cohasset health board discussed the notification at their meeting last week. They instructed health agent Dr. Joseph Godzik to write back to DEQE detailing the response.

In the letter sent July 16 to the state, the local health board noted "more intermediate cover material with a lower permeability rate is being used. Final cover and capping of that portion of the landfill which is completed will be accomplished this fall. Money has been appropriated for this purpose this fiscal year."

The board explained that funding for a litter fence was recently appropriated by the town. Bids for the perimeter fence will be opened Aug. 18. In the meantime, the board wrote, the supervisor has been instructed to place small amounts of cover material on the refuse to minimize scattering of the litter.

Cohasset's week . . .

Landfill hours

At its meeting of July 14 the board of health officially voted the hours for trash deposition at the Cedar Street Landfill will be from 7:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m.

As in the past, the landfill is open every day except for Mondays, Wednesdays and holidays. The board reserves the right to close the landfill unannounced during emergency situations.

Toxic waste cleanup initiative

Cohasset citizens are organizing a campaign meeting Tuesday, July 29 at 8 p.m. for the Hazardous Waste Emergency Cleanup Initiative. The Initiative is Question 4 on the upcoming November ballot.

The Initiative will establish timetables and standards to speed the cleanup of the 1000 plus hazardous waste dumpsites in Massachusetts. Many of these sites pose a high risk to nearby drinking water supplies.

"The hazardous waste problem requires immediate action — our health and future is at stake," said Irving Martel, one of the organizers of the gathering. "We are meeting on Tuesday to discuss what we need to do here in Cohasset to make sure that the Initiative passes in November."

Lynn Nesselbush, the campaign's field director will be speaking at the meeting.

All Cohasset residents are invited to the meeting. For information and directions, call 292-4821.

Old Colony station sites

At a meeting last week of the Old Colony Railroad Citizens Advisory Committee, three station sites were proposed for Cohasset. The suggested sites will be reviewed more fully with town officials by the fall, committee members stated.

If the communities agree with the site, a range of environmental issues will be studied by the citizens group.

The three Cohasset proposed sites include: North Cohasset in a 275-acre triangle of property bordered by North Main and King Streets, Route 3A and the Woodside Cemetery with access from Route 3A; the Music Circus at the east end of the facility's parking lot, adjacent to Sohier Street; and Cohasset Center at the site of the former station. There would be no parking lot at the Cohasset Center site.

The environmental issues to be studied by the group include several subjects from aesthetic and archaeology, to safety, security and community disruption.

The deadline for news copy is Tuesday at noon for the Cohasset Mariner.

A conversation with Selectman Diane Sullivan

phone. While I'm telling him to be quiet, he's writing me a note saying he's going to ride his bike. He's actually very good about it. I'd say he's become a very good writer because of me."

Sullivan is quick to note that at no time is town business a priority over family. "If that ever happens, that's the end (of her municipal career)," she warned.

Her husband, Jack, is also understanding of her hectic schedule. "Actually, my husband leaves very early for work, so most nights I have to myself. Of course, every now and then he says, 'c'mon on . . .' but for the most part, he's very understanding. With all the phone calls and the lengthy meetings, I realize it can be a lot. But he understands that I love it. He sees that in me, and he understands."

The nine-year Cohasset resident is also a marrying Justice of the Peace. Sullivan is proud of that accomplishment.

"A long time ago, I decided I would like to do this," she explained. "And it's not easy. You have to go through a lot to be qualified and then you have to be interviewed by the Governor's Council. They have to issue their advice and consent.

"I don't do it for the money. I do it because no one is blase about getting married. Everyone, no matter why they decided to get married, tear up when they get to the vows. It's really very touching. And it's nice to be part of something that's always nice." she added.

The former Hingham resident admitted she is emotional and sentimental. "I usually don't get tearful (at the ceremony), but I feel really happy for the couple. It's always such a happy time. I guess you could say I am sentimental," she said.

Sullivan, who during the hectic winter months will spend almost every night at a municipal meeting, has several 'pet' projects. Among the issues she holds near and dear is the clean-up of Little Harbor.

Calling it a valued part of Cohasset's scenery, Sullivan has personally worked to secure state funding for the elimination of algae which is choking the water there. She is optimistic the longtime problem will soon be solved.

By Aug. 11, the town should be able to grant an award for an emergency application to the pond. This will control the algae on a temporary basis, she explained. Next year, with 30 percent state funding, the town will begin a feasibility study which will search for longterm solutions to the putrid algae problem in Little Harbor.

The harbor is a concern of Sullivan's. She has worked to ensure the fair and equitable treatment of everyone who uses the harbor facilities. Working alongside harbormaster Harry Ritter, selectmen this year have strengthened mooring regulations. Verification of moorings and payments are now enforced without exception, she said. Roosters who use vacant moorings will now be charged $15 each night.

Sullivan is also a member of the South Shore Coalition where sub committees are studying long-term solutions to the region's solid waste problems and transportation needs.

"I think the number one priority of the town is to solve its wastewater problems," Sullivan said. "That is the first thing we have to resolve."

Another priority which selectmen will address by April town meeting is a plan to renovate the police and fire station. "It needs work very badly," she commented. "We (renovation study committee) are meeting next week to discuss the proposals we've received. Then we will go out for a contract. We intend to be ready by the April town meeting - to show the town how desperately we need these improvements."

The town hall addition will be given "another shot" by the board in April after cost estimates are specified and agreed to by the study committee and the capital outlay committee.

When asked why she has volunteered her time for several years, attending municipal meetings and running for office, Sullivan was quick to reply.

"I love this town," she answered, laughing about the 'corniness' of her reply. "It keeps me functioning. It keeps me busy. I enjoy doing something worthwhile. I came to this town in 1977. I don't think one person has arrived in this town who doesn't love it."

She makes at least one trip daily into town hall, and is readily accessible by phone. "A lot of people call for a variety of reasons. I encourage it. They call when they have problems to be resolved. Harbor complaints, dog complaints, noise complaints - those are some of the reasons. Sometimes they apologize for the late hour. But I really don't mind.

"That's why I decided to run for selectman. I'm around to help people. There's no need to apologize for asking for my help."

Town is making progress on housing application

The town is making progress in the area of providing affordable housing, according to Selectmen Chairman Diane Sullivan.

"It seems as if our intentions are acceptable to the state," Sullivan said. "The state wanted to see us take some specific steps."

Sullivan said selectmen received a letter dated June 4 from the state Executive Office of Communities and Development (EOCD) stating if the town agreed to develop specific, developable strategies to provide affordable housing, the state agency would waive previously-threatened actions.

Selectmen received a letter from EOCD in April threatening that the town would be declared ineligible for state discretionary grants if an affordable housing policy was not developed.

Selectman Clifford Mitman and Executive Secretary Donald Andrew met with EOCD's Carol Ford in May to discuss the housing issue. Ford urged the town to develop a housing plan, Andrew said.

"We do expect the town to move quickly to develop Chapter 705 family housing to fulfill your prior commitment," said Ford at the meeting.

The town signed a commitment with EOCD in 1983 committing the town to developing a housing policy.

After the meeting with Ford, selectmen established a fair housing committee to develop a housing policy for the town.

"Basically the committee will be coming up with a policy to be reviewed and approved by the selectmen," Andrew said.

The committee is made up of Patrick Plante and Daniel Cotton from the planning board, Leo Happenny from the housing authority, James Gallagher from selectmen and citizens Barbara Froio and the Rev. Clifford Cutler.

Sullivan said the fair housing committee, the housing authority, the planning board and selectmen will be working to address the housing issue.

Comment on Old Colony railroad

Cohasset's two representatives to the Old Colony Railroad citizens' advisory committee (CAC), outlined their comments during a recent walking tour of the railroad bed. Their comments were submitted to selectmen for their review.

CAC representatives Debbie Cook and Martha Gjesteby concluded the railroad right of way is basically intact. Although some residents have used it for aunauthorized purposes, discontinuing these uses will not cause undue hardship, they determined.

The railroad right of way is in town ownership and has been maintained for walking and horseback riding. The representatives also observed the air quality has the potential of being downgraded depending on the railroad equipment selected, location of stations and construction techniques.

Cook and Gjesteby made their comments following a two-day field trip in May. They were accompanied by naturalist Annette Sechen.

During their trip they observed there is a potentially dangerous railroad crossing for vehicular traffic coming down the hill from Pond Street to Spring Street. A large rock outcropping obstructs the car driver's view of the tracks.

New homes on Lantern Lane may be impacted, they stated. Generally, however, they felt the area has remained relatively undeveloped and probably does not differ much from when the trains used to pass through.

The representatives also commented the Edison Plant might make a good parking site on North Main Street.

Dump violations

Regarding the inadequate supervision of the landfill, the local board responded by stating, "the landfill supervisor has been in that position for ten years. Civil Designs, the board of health consulting engineer for the landfill makes regular inspections and submits reports of those inspections to the DEQE. Civil Designs is always available for telephone consultations for resolution of problems or routine operation of the landfill."

The Cohasset board noted in their response to the charge the landfill is not operated in accordance with plans, that no lateral expansion has taken place in some time. "This expansion was recognized shortly after it occurred and has stopped."

DEQE spokesman noted, "many municipalities throughout the state do not have a true accounting of the costs of running a landfill. We find this to be a common problem with many community-operated landfills."

THE EASY WAY TO HOUSEHUNT

If you've been househunting on your own, you've probably been relying on the classified ads or driving through your favorite neighborhoods in search of "For Sale" signs. A good Realtor can save you time and gasoline, making your search easy and efficient.

Agents learn about homes as they go on the market, and the best values may sell before they're ever advertised! Good agents often beat the sign installation crews to the scene! Since the agent has seen so many of the available homes, he will be able to rule out many of the ones that don't fit your tastes or needs, saving you the trouble of having to go through them. With the increased use of the Multiple Listing Service, an agent can show you listings of colleagues from other firms, as well as those listed by his own company. He can also give you any information you need about nearby public transportation, schools, shopping, and recreational facilities.

The professionals at HOME CENTER REALTY are ready to serve all of your real estate needs. Please call us at 749-8833 or stop by our offices at 57 Water St., Hingham.

State A.G. rejects smoke, sprinkler bylaws

The attorney general shot down two zoning bylaw amendments which were overwhelmingly approved at the April town meeting.

Both amendments were proposed by the Cohasset Fire Department. The first would have required smoke and heat detectors installed in new commercial buildings and additions.

The second, which was the first proposal of its kind in the state, would have required the installation of water sprinkler systems in all new homes.

According to attorney Henry F. O'Connell of the attorney general's office, the two zoning bylaw amendments constitute a change in the state's building code. Any changes to that code, he noted, must follow the procedures set forth by state law.

In order to amend the state building code, selectmen must petition the State Board of Building Regulations and Standards "for the adoption of rules and regulations imposing more restrictive local standards than those established by the State Building Code," O'Connell stated in a letter to Town Clerk Frances Marks.

Fire Chief Daniel Brock said he would like to see selectmen petition the state board. "I'm all for going forward on this," he said this week. "Town meeting approved it overwhelmingly, and I think we should continue."

Cohasset was the first community in the state, and one of the first in the country to require installation of water sprinkler systems in residences.

Despite the objections of local developers, town meeting in April approved the measure which would require the sprinkler systems in all newly-constructed homes. The cost of the system, according to Chief Daniel Brock, would be approximately one percent of the construction value.

In his presentation to town meeting last April, Chief Brock noted that studies of the residential systems indicate sprinklers react fast enough to limit the amount of toxic fumes from a fire. Dramatic incidents throughout the country indicate that sprinklers have saved lives and property, he stated.

Studies have concluded, the chief said, that accidental release of the sprinklers occurs only once in 16 million systems. They are proven effective in extinguishing flames and fumes in the area of the fire's origin, he added.

The chief noted Cohasset is one of the first communities in the country to require the residential systems. "It's something we've seen at seminars, but no town in the state has yet to enforce it," he added. "I think it's a good amendment, though, and I'd like to see selectmen petition the state building code commission."

If selectmen, after conferring with town counsel, agree to the petition, the state board must hold public hearings on the matter. "After they hold the hearings, then the state will vote on the amendment. If they approve it, then the town's zoning bylaw will be amended," Chief Brock said.

The chief noted that several communities in the state have been looking to Cohasset for direction. "No one has yet to pass a similar bylaw amendment, that I know of, but many are very interested. They are looking to us now," the chief said.

The second bylaw rejected by the state concerned the required installation of smoke and heat detectors in all new buildings and additions. Once again, attorney Henry O'Connell ruled that the Cohasset bylaw change altered the substance of the state's building code and would require approval of the state building code commission.

At the April meeting, Chief Brock explained the smoke and heat detector guidelines would be worked out with the planning board. "We would like to offset the increase in the demand of the Cohasset Fire Department. This would help. We are looking to fight small, not large fires in town," he said at the April town meeting. "We are attempting to put the cost of the systems on the developer or builder. As your fire chief, I am responsible for switching from fire suppression to fire prevention."

The article was approved unanimously by town meeting, despite the objections of wiring inspector Stephen Wigmore. The inspector warned town meeting voters there was too much to review before approving the proposal.

The state attorney general's office approved article 40 of the April town meeting warrant. That article amended the zoning bylaw to prohibit the storage of hazardous waste materials in the town's designated water resource district. The district, which encompasses 4.6 miles of land, was developed to protect and preserve the town's water supply. The zoning amendment was developed for the April meeting after a building moratorium district was rendered void by the attorney general's office following its approval at the December special town meeting.

Businesses dealing with toxic or hazardous materials are prohibited in the district, along with landfills and junkyards. Underground storage of hazardous materials is forbidden, along with above ground storage of toxic or hazardous materials in excess of 25 pounds or 55 gallons, except home heating oil.

According to warrant article 40, the board of health must be notified of any routine commercial or municipal application of herbicides or pesticides within the water resource district.

There are town wide provisions in the amended bylaw stating every underground storage tank must be registered with the board of health. The tanks must be tested at installation and in 10 years. Watershed Protection Study Committee member Jeff Bettinger told town meeting voters, "the two articles give the town a full protective method."

'Look at that sign!' frequently heard. . .

been driven into a solid rock ledge.

He added, the stains, oils and varnish he used have made the cabinet waterproof. "It's a very durable finish; it has to be, because they use that marine style varnish on boats.

After the heavy construction, Green got down to the smaller details.

"Paul Binkley and I tried to figure out what kind of lettering to use," he said. "We didn't want to use something scrolly because you couldn't read it. And we didn't want old english lettering or something like that, just a nice, simple, readable type lettering.

"We wanted to keep it like an old antique sign."

The colors he chose enhanced the sign's character.

"For some reason," he said, "I always pictured the green and the red. Green, because it's The Green Gage Plum.

"Red has always reminded me of antiques," he said. "The old, red paint in a chair or blanket chest... That old red.

"I liked those colors and I thought they'd blend in nicely," he said.

"All the things on the shelves inside the cupboard," he added, "are reminiscent of antique pieces.

"Some of them actually are antique jugs or pitchers," he explained, "though they're no good anymore, because they've had screws put into them so they don't blow away."

Green said he believes the sign has helped attract more business.

"I was standing by the door one day," he recalled, "and I heard this noise. It was a woman driving by and she was looking at the sign. Her husband was sitting next to her and she was riding shotgun and she yelled out, 'Look at that sign!'"

His mother added, "I've seen people from out of state stop and take pictures of it."

Despite such reactions, Green said he finds most people focus their attentions on Stop & Shop, the liquor store and the Farmer's Pride Market across the street.

"We're really on the wrong side of the street," he said. "At the Farmer's Pride Market, there are changes every season and there's all kinds of colors over there. It's a very beautiful place."

Green said he plans to make changes to the sign, as well as to the surrounding area, so more potential customers don't pass without a glance.

"Probably before the end of the summer, we'll go over the red with a border of yellow and maybe change the green paint to a lighter shade of green.

"Once everything's done," he said, "it's going to be better. We have beautiful hemlocks behind the sign now and it looks gorgeous, especially in the winter when the snow lands on the trees and on the sign."

He added, "We want to keep it natural. When it's cleared out and landscaped with shrubs and flowering bushes, then as you're driving, the beauty of that will draw your eye up and you'll be able to see it a lot better."

For all the work it has taken to put the shelves in the sky, and for all the work yet to be done, Green said he is pleased with the way his unique sign conveys the image of The Green Gage Plum.

"You see a lot of people doing different things with signs," he said. "You want to have the individuality and you want people to remember you for certain things."

Green's pet peeve?

"I hate plastic and neon," he said. "That to me has no personality, no warmth. It doesn't say anything, but what the name of the place is."

At The Green Gage Plum, the sign speaks for itself.

How did Bob Fiori of 235 Beechwood Street train his ducks to stay off the road? For more information, contact Bob at the Exxon Station on Route 3A.

☐ Barbara Weisenfluh of the Cohasset office of Hunneman and Co., Inc. achieved a year to date residential sales volume of over $2 million.

Recognition of this accomplishment was given by Saul B. Cohen, president of Hunneman and Company, Inc., at a recent sales associates meeting held at the Burlington Marriott. At the meeting, Cohen stated Weisenfluh's performance as a broker puts her among the company's leading Associates and reflects her commitment to professionalism.

☐ Although we're sure that they are enjoying their summer "to the max," here's betting that there are a few soon-to-be seventh graders that can't wait for fall. . .they are the new class officers, who were elected before school ended last spring. President of the class is Rebecca Kirk; vice president, J. MacCampbell; secretary, Rebecca Tosca; treasurer, Laurie Bronstein, and representatives, Jennifer Reidy and Brooks Doten. Other newsworthy notes concerning the class comes in the form of their sixth grade graduation where honors were bestowed on the following: John Geary and Rebecca Kirk were the recipients of the Athletic/Scholastic/Citizenship Award, and Rod Hemassi, Vanessa Jones and John O'Leary were recipients of the Math Awards. Congratulations to all mentioned, and good luck with the "Big Guys" at the high school.

☐ If you are wondering why Kate Pyle is grinning from ear to ear lately, she sure has a good reason! Kate, who is 14, won the tennis championship in the NELTA Tournament, held in Duxbury recently. The championship competition was made up of 14 year-olds, and it certainly is an honor to come out of Duxbury with the Junior Championship under your belt. Great work, Kate! Looks like we'll be hearing a lot about Kate in the future, too. She earned a varsity letter in softball last spring. . .

☐ More beaming grandparents can be spotted "Around Town," this time Mr. and Mrs. Henry Rattenbury. Paul and Sherri Rattenbury, who live at 55 Norfolk Road became the parents of a daughter, Tiffany Lee, on July 15. What a happy lot they are. To add to the delight Tiffany Lee is the first girl in the Rattenbury family, as well as being the first grandchild! Tiffany's other grandparents live in Virginia, so she is sure to be a "world traveler" at an early age. Congratulations to all.

☐ Our sewer department superintendent, Manuel Salvador, has become one of the first plant operators in the country to complete a specialized sewage treatment course offered by California State University at Sacramento. The course that he took covered all phases of treating wastewater.

☐ Beth Jordan was honored recently by South Shore Hospital Volunteers for her work with the Hospice Program, and we congratulate her for a job well done.

☐ Edwin and Susan Brown will surely be a busy couple. They became the happy parents of a baby girl, born on June 29 at South Shore Hospital.

☐ Don't expect Sandy Thereriault to come down out of the clouds for a few more days. . .She was in Marshfield Hills last week and guess who she bumped into. Jack Nicholson and Cher! And guess who she had breakfast with. Jack Nicholson and Cher! Wonder if she found it hard to swallow, she sure must have been excited.

☐ The Cohasset swim team had their second meet of the season, and they posted a landslide victory over the Duxbury Yacht Club. Look for the results in this paper, as they are too lengthy to report here. They are exciting ones! Last Friday they were scheduled to meet at the Scituate Yacht Club, and here's hoping they extended their record to 3-0.

☐ What will the harbor be like next summer without our very own Harry Ritter? It won't be the same, that's for certain.

☐ Happy 30th Anniversary to Wilma and Hubert Vanderlugt.

☐ Dennis Kowal has a super reason to be proud of himself. He was selected to design the state Vietnam War Memorial a few weeks ago. What an honor for a true artist, and his is a real tribute to a war that no one will forget.

☐ The Cohasset Little League All-Star team has been a busy bunch lately, with games everywhere. Haven't been informed of their record, but we'll bet it's a good one. What is the news, fellas?

☐ What is your news? Sure would love to have it for this so that all might share! Give me a call with your summer plans, or send your news to "Around Town," Box 71, Cohasset, MA.

There's a new group of athletes in town. They are all over 60 and have pledged to "Keep Moving."

"Keep Moving" is a statewide network of Walking Clubs and Annual Governor's Cup. Designed by the Executive Office of Elder Affairs to promote exercise, fitness, and socialization, the "Keep Moving," program was launched a few years ago by Gov. Michael S. Dukakis and Elder Affairs Secretary Richard H. Rowland.

"Daily walks can lead elders to better health and greater independence, said Gov. Dukakis. "And with our senior in the lead, working towards better health is something we can all take part in."

"Over 3,000 elders have enrolled in community based walking clubs in Mass. and membership roster increases weekly. We are excited and encouraged by the success of this program," said Elder Affairs Secretary Rowland. "Walking with friends in their own communities, "Keep Moving" club members enjoying the exercise and the camaraderie."

Take the first step, register at the Cohasset Senior Center Mondays - Fridays. Uncoming trips for the Walking Club: July 25, Norris Reservation in Norwell; Aug. 1, Norris Reservation in Norwell; Aug. 8, Webb State Park in Weymouth; Aug. 15, Nantasket Beach in Hull; Aug. 22, Bear Cove Park in Hingham; Aug. 29, Wompatuck State Park in Hingham.

Jurors named for Heritage Days photo show

Jurors for the ninth annual photo show which is part of Heritage Days, sponsored by the Chamber of Commerce, have been named by Scituate photographer Rudolph Mitchell, chairman of the show and president of the Chamber of Commerce.

They are Dan Sheehan and James Tringale, both of Scituate, and Susan White of Hanover, all professional photographers.

They will judge and critique the entries Sunday, Aug. 3, from 9 a.m. to noon at G.A.R. Hall on Country Way, near First Parish Road. The public is invited to watch and listen to the photographers as they score each print.

Every print entered, regardless of how it was scored, will be hung at the show on Heritage Days weekend. To be held at St. Mary's Hall, the show will be held Saturday, Aug. 9, from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and the public will vote for their favorites. On Sunday, Aug. 10, the hours will be from noon to 3 p.m.

Plaques will be awarded Sunday, Aug. 10 to both the juried and public winners. To date, the same photo has not been chosen the best by the jurors or the public.

Amateur photographers, regardless of age, may submit any number of unframed black and white or color prints. The entry fee for each print is $2.50.

Not just memories

Once again, tragedy hit home. It may have been in a next door community. But it reminded us once again how vulnerable we all are on the highways and along the streets of our town.

This weekend, a drunk dri ver smashed into a car, killing one girl and maiming another. Police say the driver's car was filled with beer cans. Police say he appeared to be drunk when he got out of the car.

This was his second drunk driving accident. He is 20 years old.

It hits home because we all feel helpless. We don't have to know the family of the deceased to feel their anguish. A mother, father, and two sisters have just experienced the dreaded hours of a wake, and are preparing to bury their 20 year-old daughter. A beautiful, bright girl who had the future and friends in abundance, will be buried this week.

Another young girl is lying in a hospital bed. Just awakened from a coma, she has yet to recognize her mother, father, brothers and sister. She has yet to realize what occurred last Friday night.

Simply, there is no reason for a tragedy like this.

Our first reaction is to go over to that 20 year-old man, who is young and strong and healthy. We feel like taking hold of his throat and never releasing our hands. We feel like shaking him with the same violence that gripped his young victim and shouting to him, "do you realize what you've done? You've killed a human being. You've injured another. And you've brought endless sadness to many families."

But then we must sit back and calmly rationalize that we are not his judge. We are his brother. We are equal and no better than that young man.

When we were 20 years old, we never thought of death. Driving was an acquired skill - one we learned to command with perfection. We never thought that a drink or two impaired this skill to the point we may cause someone's death. That may have happened to others, but it would never happen to us.

And no one, when climbing into a car, envisions so clearly the potential danger of a drunk driver aiming for us. How many take extra caution at night, knowing a drunk driver may be around the corner?

How many accidents will it take before our children and their parents realize we can not drink and drive? Must it always take a tragedy that hits home?

The grief that follows such tragedies soon dims. We may recall this accident and many more yet to occurr when we drive past the scene or read about this young man's court araignment. But our memories will fade with age.

They will dim until another terrible tragedy occurs. Until we read about some crash caused by a drunk driver in which a life filled with promise and endless ambition was ended.

The memories of all these accidents will be set aside until it is like a lonesome, lingering thought on a rainy day.

They are memories. Until it hits home.

Use of Unitarian Church a mistake

Letters

To the Editor:

In reference to Mr. Atkinson's letter in last week's edition:

First of all, to my friend, Dan Broudeur: I'm glad you're sticking up for your beliefs and spreading God's Word in faith.

Next, I'd like to say that I'm not a critical person and I certainly don't judge people. I don't accuse a person of being a witch, but I do know that many exist today who don't even know that they practice evil. Satan is deceiving them. They claim to fortell the future and heal people without the Devil's power, yet they don't know that it is. Witchcraft of any form is of Satan, whether apparent or not!

Now, about the movie . . . It is evil because it is based on an evil, filthy book. Anyone who reads it will immediately notice its vulgarity, perversion, and evil connotation. Why anyone would want to make a trashy novel into a movie is beyond me —but that's Hollywood! Poor Mr. Atkinson is being mislead. I'm not judging him or being cruel when I say that I believe he is not a Christian as I believe the Bible defines one. A Unitarian has told me that they don't believe that Jesus Christ is one with God. The Unitarians don't believe in the Trinity, so naturally they'll have opposing opinions to those of other beliefs. True, the Unitarians are heavily into the Bible and quoting Scripture, yet they base what they read upon science, reason, and intellect, as if Christianity were a college course and not a personal relationship with Christ. Mr. Atkinson has obviously studied religion and has done his homework. He sounds like he knows it all — yet as a Christian (as I see it) I feel he doesn't. It appears to me that he is into a humanistic interpretation of the Scriptures. I'm only 18 and, being a new Christian, I can't quote much Scripture off the top of my head. Nevertheless, I do know that the Lord is my Savior and that just by living I know He loves me and cares enough to be my best friend. I believe He has given me the privelege of having a personal relationship with Him. He shows me what is right and wrong in His eyes as I pray for wisdom and discernment. Rather than trying uselessly to interpret the most highly controversial literature ever existing (the Bible), I pray that He will for me. And it works!

In my opinion, Mr. Atkinson's allowance of the movie-makers to use the Unitarian Church in the film is a big mistake. I believe that God would definitely not want a movie based on evil ways in His "house," and this approval has led me to believe yet further that Unitarianism is not true Christianity and therefore, according to the Bible is not of God's Will.

Sincerely,
Damian M. Wolfe

P.S.: No offense whatsoever personally to Mr. Atkinson (or the congregation). My only anger is towards Satan.

Mr. Atkinson: What do you have to say about John 3:16 and John 10:30? Do you just omit that part of the bible about Jesus?

Golden's Congressional testimony faulted

To the Editor:

Senator Golden's testimony on Pilgrim Station on July 16 to a Congressional subcommittee may have been well meant, or it may have been simply the political opportunism of a media opportunity, but it reveals pretty spotty staff work.

Too many "articles of faith" of the anti-nuclear cabal have been included, thus degrading what is of value.

For example, the favorite taunt that the industry used to claim that nuclear electricity would be too cheap to meter. Having been involved in numerous economic analyses of various ways of generating electricity, I can say that nuclear costs were always considered significant, although total generating cost always worked out to be less than any other means yet to be built, except sometimes at coal fired generating plants located at the mine mouth.

Of course nuclear costs have escalated in recent years because of the regulatory morat and intervention which have caused costly delays. The "too cheap to meter" phrase comes from a facetious remark in a luncheon speech years ago by a former AEC Commissioner Lewis Strauss. Nobody in the industry ever took it seriously — businessmen and engineers have to work with reality. Only politicians can work with promises.

Rather than expanding the 10 mile Emergency Planning Zone, with all of the exotic preplanned interaction of municipal officials, sirens, etc., we should reduce the EPZ to about a 2 mile radius, supplemented by well equipped monitoring units which can advise unhurried response further out, if and where needed, depending on nature of the accident, wind direction, weather, etc. Normal police traffic control and communications with people via commercial TV and radio would suffice.

This avoids clogging the roads with those who have no need to evacuate, while permitting brisk movement from the inner area.

Chernobyl seems to have confirmed what the internatinal scientific studies since Three Mile Island has determined that the radiation doses which might justify brisk evacuation could occur only very close to the plant.

Of course, evacuation is unlikely ever to be needed, because the containment system is designed and

VoTech summer programs called innovative

By John O'Donnell
Mariner Staff

South Shore Vocational Technical High School is offering two new programs this summer at its Hanover and Abington campuses, a remedial program and a vocational program for disadvantaged and handicapped students.

About 140 students from all over the South Shore will be participating in the two programs, said VoTech guidance counselor John Kosko, a coordinator of the programs.

"The programs are both very innovative," Kosko told the regional school committee last week. "They're serving as model programs for the state."

The first program is a remedial program designed to strengthen academic and technical weaknesses in both incoming ninth graders and those who were freshmen at VoTech last year.

The program will concentrate on basic English and math skills like vocabulary, word problems, decimals and fractions.

"It's the overwhelming feeling on both the academic and technical staff that students are not prepared for the rigors of our academic and technical education," said Kosko.

"Teachers ask how they can teach a technical theory when the students don't have the basics," said Kosko. "This program is geared toward specific, basic skills."

Kosko said that 42 students have signed up for the program, which began this week. He said that about half of the students were ninth graders last year, and the other half are incoming students.

"There's a broad spectrum of kids from every town that we serve," said Kosko. "We're excited because the long term ramification is that we have a yearly program where we can remediate our own kids and not rely on other summer schools."

The other program, held at the Abington campus, will provide vocational training for economically disadvantaged and physically or educationally handicapped students, Kosko said.

"It will provide job training for a lot of kids who might not otherwise get that training," he said.

The Abington program will include students from outside the VoTech regional district's eight communities. Kosko said that around 100 students are signed up for the program, from Quincy to Plymouth and as far west as Brockton.

The program will offer training in 11 skill areas, including cooking, painting and wall finishing, component assembly, building maintenance, landscaping and retail skills.

The Abington program will cost about $130,000 and will be paid for through federal grants and grants from the South Coastal Career Development Office. State grants will pay for the $30,000 remedial program.

"These programs provide a great deal of exposure for the school," said Kosko. "They provide better use of our facilities without any costs to us."

The programs began July 13 and run through August 15.

In other business, the school committee reviewed changes to the school disciplinary code that will be considered for inclusion in the student handbook.

Penalties including detentions, suspensions and letters to parents will be given for offenses including cursing, carrying cigarettes, decorating the inside of lockers, and spitting.

The proposed policies will be added to the student handbook, which the school committee will vote on at a future meeting.

Also, towns in the regional school district will divide $37,520 in tuition money paid by students who live outside the district.

The amount of money received by each town is based on the amount of money each town pays to the district.

The largest refund will go to Whitman, receiving $7,770. Next comes Rockland, $6,990; Abington, $6,060; Hanover, $5,594; Hanson, $5,437; Scituate, $3,107; Norwell, $1,632; and Cohasset, $930.

The school committee also approved hiring a permanent substitute teacher for the coming school year.

Sandy Smith, a certified English teacher, will be hired as permanent substitute at the rate of $50 a day, or $9,100 for the year. Her salary will come from the $18,000 substitute teacher budget.

Superintendent Clifford Easton said that Smith will be assigned to study halls and do administrative work on days when she is not needed in a classroom.

Easton said that 385 teacher days were lost to illness last year and that teachers averaged 6.75 absences last year.

Cohasset resident celebrates store expansion

"This is a very proud moment for me. It is the fulfillment of a dream that's been 35 years in the making."

The moment Darrell Roberts, of Cohasset, referred to, is the Grand Opening of the new Suburban TV & Appliance Center in Hanover.

Mr. Roberts is the founder and president of Suburban, which has been serving the South Shore from Route 3A in North Weymouth since 1949.

Ribbon-cutting Ceremonies July 10 kicked off two weeks of sales and special events to mark the opening of the 30,000-square-foot facility on Route 53, just south of the Hanover Mall.

Activities will include microwave and Jenn-Air cooking demonstrations, a live broadcast Saturday by the WATD radio mobile studio, clowns, balloons and special giveaways.

Both locations will offer free video filming of children as a public service.

A drawing will be held on Saturday July 19 for prizes including a 100-watt stereo system and a console color TV.

The brown and white building houses a display floor, full service shop for appliances and home electronics and 20,000 square feet of warehouse storage space.

"It took hard work from many good people to build our business," Mr. Roberts said. "From the beginning, we made a commitment to offer quality merchandise at competitive pricing.

"And, most importantly, we have backed that merchandise with a staff of skilled technicians and salespeople who genuinely care about the customer."

Mr. Roberts left a position as assistant chief of planning for Bethlehem Steel at the Fore River shipyard to enter the television and appliance business.

"We really had everything going against us: no parking space, the ocean on one side, but in spite of it all, we've made our North Weymouth location a success.

"Our Hanover location offers plenty of parking, just one mile south of Route 3. The warehouse space will allow us to stock more merchandise for next-day delivery," Roberts said.

Roberts is a past president of the Neighborhood Club and former vice-president of the Cohasset Country Club. He is a charter member and current member of the Board of Trustees of Quincy Junior College, and a member of the advisory board of the Quincy Vocational-Technical School.

An active Rotarian for many years, he is also a member of the board of directors for Colonial Federal Savings Bank in Wollaston. He has served on committees in connection with the General Dynamics Shipyard and Fore River Bridge Replacement Project.

He received the 1978 Community Service Award from the Quincy School Committee for his efforts on behalf of students from the Voc-Tech.

Joining Mr. Roberts as officers in the newly-formed corporation are his nephew, Darrell S. Roberts and Robert J. D'Orval.

The younger Roberts is a certified public accountant and graduate of Bentley College. A former supervisor for Coopers & Lybrand, he serves as Suburban's vice president and treasurer.

He is a member of Hingham Rotary, South Shore YMCA, the Massachusetts Society of Certified Public Accountants and the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants.

Bob D'Orval has been named vice president in charge of sales and service. Mr. D'Orval worked for the Boston Herald and Goodrich Tire before coming to Suburban 22 years ago. He has been general manager of the Weymouth operation for 15 years.

A Hingham resident, he has long been active in civic and community affairs.

Managing the Hanover store will be Dick Mattulina, who has served 12 years with Suburban, the last five as Weymouth's sales manager.

A graduate of Northeastern University and Massachusetts Radio & Electronics School, Mattulina formerly worked for The Patriot Ledger, Quincy Sun and Boston Globe.

Another veteran employee, Carl Green, has been promoted to manager of the Weymouth store.

Mr. Green, who attended Quincy schools and the University of Massachusetts, has been a Surburban employee for 14 years.

Sen. Golden's Congressional testimony is faulty tested to withstand accident pressures. As TMI demonstrated, little release of radiation is achievable.

The future costs of decommissioning and waste disposal will be better known with experience, but the limits of costs are pretty clear, and are insignificant compared to the value of electricity produced during a plant's lifetime. Incidentally, some small plants in the USA and Europe have been decommissioned. But many large plants probably will be recommissioned, rather than decommissioned, for many more years of useful service. Waste disposal is a political problem, and not much of a technical problem — all we need do is implement what is already well developed and demonstrated.

Harold Denton's remark about Mark 1 containments is being quoted out of context. He was urging improvements in procedures to further preclude a minor accident from escalating into a complete meltdown. Granted, Mark 2 and 3 containments make more efficient use of material and have construction and operating advantages, and Detroit Edison's Fermi 2 plant was licensed with a Mark 1 containment only about 18 months ago. It was a plant with a long delayed schedule. Like Pilgrim, its containment has been upgraded from the original design.

The Price Anderson Act, which provides some of the liability insurance, is hardly a subsidy — it is one of the few government activities that makes money. The premiums are paid by the utility, and presumably would be higher if paid to a private insurer. It is amusing that Democrats object to such socialistic enterprise as Price Anderson.

Senator Golden suggests that the federal government stop listening only to experts and technocrats and start listening to the American people. Well, the other side of the coin is when catering to public pressure overrides technical judgment, as when the Challenger shuttle continued to be flown when it should have been grounded for modification.

Inexpert interference with nuclear energy has greatly increased costs, which the public ultimately bears, but safety has been achieved primarily by the competence and integrity of the engineering profession, codified it is true by regulation. Inexpert pressures on those responsible for supplying electricity may result in electricity shortages, or undue reliance on foreign oil, or the health and environmental penalties of excessive burning of fossil fuels.

Those people who misuse Einstein's suggestion that important decisions be taken to the village square (thus risking that expert judgment be submerged in mob fervour) should read an excellent paper by John Kemeny, former president of Dartmouth College, published in MIT Technology Review in June 1980, entitled "Saving America Democracy: The Lessons of Three Mile Island". I urge Senator Golden to listen more to qualified people, and rely less on Mass PIRG, Pilgrim Alliance, Union of Concerned Scientists, etc.

Scituate's parade

Scituate is celebrating its 350th birthday this year, and on Saturday, July 26, a spectacular parade will step off at 10 a.m. in front of the Central Park elderly housing complex on Branch Street.

The parade which is expected to last for at least two hours will march down First Parish Road in Scituate Center to Front Street in the harbor business district, pass the reviewing stand and disassemble on Jericho Road.

Between 8 a.m. and 1 p.m., parking will be banned along the parade route, according to Edward Horne, parade chairman, who has choreographed the event.

Dignitaries from far and near have been invited to attend, including the deputy mayor of Tenterden, County Kent, England. Tenterden was the home of many of the Men of Kent who first settled Scituate.

Cohasset was honored to welcome a fine assemblage of French citizens and dignitaries from its sister-city, Souppes-sur-Loing, France. From left to right are the mayor's granddaughter Diane, Monsieur Rene Dine, Madame Violette Prudhomme, Representative Mary Jeanette Murray, Monsieur Le Maire Victor Prudhomme, and Madame France Dine enjoying a visit to the House of Representatives at the State House.

State House sends best wishes to Souppes-sur-Loing

Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray officially presented Souppes-sur-Loing mayor LeMarie Victor Prudhomme presented with a resolution from the House of Representatives extending their best wishes to the citizens of Cohasset's sister-city, Souppes-sur-Loing.

The resolution was signed by Speaker of the House, George Keverian, Clerk of the House, Robert MacQueen and the Representative herself. The resolution was accompanied by a letter from the Governor, Michael S. Dukakis noting, "As we celebrate our Independence Day on July 4th refurbishing our renown Statue of Liberty, we remember our gratitude the French people who so generously gave us this important monument as a symbol of admiration and friendship between our citizens and countries."

Rep. Murray also invited the mayor and his entourage to her office, in Boston, and they enjoyed a day of discovering how the Massachusetts government runs while absorbing the beauty and history of the State House.

The liason between Cohasset and Souppes-sur-Loing dates back to World War II when Cohasset resident, Thomas G. Churchill, then Executive Officer of the Tank Battalion of the Fourth Armored Division of Patton's famed Third Army, was given orders of taking and holding the bridge in Souppes which crossed the Loing River.

Major Churchill and his battalion arrived in the dark of night to take this bridge. After some hours of fighting, and the loss of several American men, the battalion succeeded in taking this bridge and in keeping it open to the Allies. During this time, the Major met two sisters from Souppes, young girls, who acted as interpreters for him during his assignment at the bridge. Their names are Christine and Regina Texier. He later met their parents and the family became friends with Major Churchill. These two sisters, and their husbands, were among the entourage visiting Cohasset with the mayor.

July 8, the visitors, with the exception of the granddaughter who is staying for an extra month, returned to their home of Souppes-sur-Loing.

Murray warns of changes in generic drug law

"State health officials believe they can mandate the increased use of generic drugs while convincing doctors and patients that these pharmaceuticals are safe and less costly substitutes for brand name products." Said State Representative Mary Jeanette Murray, 3rd Plymouth District.

Starting July 1, doctors have to specify on a prescription if they want patients to receive a brand name drug; otherwise the patient will automatically received the brand name's generic equivalent. This change is calculated to save Massachusetts' consumers 55 million dollars. Seniors are likely to be the biggest beneficiaries, since they use nearly three times the amount of prescribed drugs as the rest of the population.

Rep. Murray said, "Manufacturers have the sole right to produce a drug they have developed under a brand name for the 17 year life of the drug's patent. When the patent runs out, production restrictions are removed and the drug can be sold under its chemical or generic name. The ingredients in a brand drug and its generic counterpart may be indentical and, indeed, both drugs must be subject to the same federal tests. The product, however, may vary greatly in cost."

It is estimated that generic drugs cost between one-quarter and one-third the price of brand names. Seniors who receive coverage through Blue Cross will receive additional savings on generic purchases. The insurer will completely reimburse purchases of generic drugs and cover 80 percent of the cost of a brand name drug.

Implementation of the new one-line prescription form won't mean that generics will soon become the medicine of preference. Generic drug advocates, including Older Americans and the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MASSPIRG), hope that eventually, half of the estimated 30 million prescriptions written annually in Massachusetts will be for generics.

"Generics are also not likely to make any inroads into hospitals since hospital in-patient pharmacies will be exempt from the requirement to stock generic drugs. A law passed last year permits them to continue to take advantage of their ability to buy brand name drugs in bulk at costs lower than generics," Rep Murray concluded.

Chain Drug Stores oppose the hospital exemption and are concerned that the number of prescriptions written in hospitals is increasing.

Since they are exempt, hospitals will remain a major marketing area for brand name drug manufacturers.

"For several sessions I have submitted a bill to the Taxation Committee of which I am a member to exempt generic and non-prescription drugs and medications from sales tax.

"Just as food and clothing are not taxed it seems far more essential and critical that the sales tax be eliminated as my proposed bills reads:—

Sales of medicine, insulin needles and insulin syringes on prescriptions of registered physicians and sales of insulin; sales of non-prescription drugs and medications; sales of oxygen, blood or blood plasma; sales of artificial devices individually designed, constructed or altered solely for the use of a particular crippled person so as to become a brace, support, supplement, correction or substitute for the bodily structure including the extremities of the individual; sales of artificial limbs, artificial eyes, hearing aids and other equipment worn as a correction or substitute for any function portion of the body; sales of artificial teeth by a dentist and the materials used by a dentist in dental treatment; sales of eyeglasses, when especially designed or prescribed by an ophthalmologist, oculist or optometrist for the personal use of the owner or purchaser; sales of crutches and wheel chairs for the use of invalids and crippled persons; and sales of baby oil.

"If you feel as strongly about this matter please contact your legislators to help consummate this bill being effected into law," Rep. Murray concluded.

'Technicolor Dreamcoat' brilliant production

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

As the house lights of Hingham High School auditorium dimmed Saturday, I must have been dreaming. It seemed as though Broadway had moved to Hingham.

The performers of Hingham's Young at Heart Theatre, through their spirit, enthusiasm and charisma, transported the packed house to the holy lands of the Old Testament, as they musically recounted the story of Joseph from the Book of Genesis.

"Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat," written by Tim Rice and Andrew Lloyd Webber, was brilliantly directed by Douglas Trudeau.

Rice and Webber also wrote "Jesus Christ Superstar" ; "Evita" ; and "Cats."

"Joseph and the Technicolor Dreamcoat" is a story about a man who has the power to interpret dreams and to read the future.

Joseph is his father's favorite of 12 sons, leaving his 11 brothers resentful of the relationship he has with their father, Jacob.

The brothers also tire of Joseph's dreams of superiority over them, which he is only too glad to interpret for them aloud.

So, the irked 11 sell Joseph to the Ishmaelites, who sell him as a slave to the Egyptian, Potiphar. Joseph makes the mistake of pitching woo with Mrs. Potiphar, and he's sent to prison.

Because of his ability to read dreams, Joseph later becomes the right hand man to the Pharaoh (Elvis Presley).

Starvation leads Joseph's brothers to his doorstep, where they are tested and proven reformed, then reunited as a family.

This show's flawless choreography and rhythm was a true testament to the professionalism of the artists involved.

The success of this musical also hinged on the fine performance of the orchestra, under the spotless direction of Lucille Ann Butler.

Suzanne Johnson, who played the narrator, was the show's leading lady. Her crystalline voice started the show on a high note, with her rendition of "You Are What You Feel."

As was the case in most numbers, "Jacob and Sons" the chorus rose in a climactic crescendo, as the relationship between Joseph and his eleven jealous brothers was introduced.

The audience favorite of Act One was "One More Angel in Heaven" featuring Jeff Stebbins as Joseph's brother Simeon.

Having sold their brother Joseph into slavery, in this scene, Simeon and the other lads help their father deal with his favorite son's "death."

Complete with cowboy hats and Texas twangs, they bid their brother a comic country & western happy trails.

The crowd also got a kick out of the swanky Potiphar, played by Jamie O'Neil.

Don Paddock, as Joseph, was at his very best singing the solo "Close Every Door," a moving ballad from behind bars in Egypt.

Paddock played the lead role with zest and sincerity. His most compelling scenes were those in which he had space to work.

The cast outdid themselves in Act Two.

The pharaoh's Elvis impersonation in "Song of the King" brought David Rhode whistles and prolonged loud applause.

The king's "she-bops" and go-go dancing harem pronounced the show's variety of musical styles as well as its wacky humor.

Lawson Clarke was tres bon as Reuben in "Those Canaan Days," a take-off on the french cabaret. The brothers were wonderfully melodramatic in their suffering.

Paddock again sparkled as Joseph in the scene where he realized his brothers had changed their ways, and was reunited with them.

The happy ending capped what was overall, an exuberant, fast-paced, wonderfully amusing production. And it richly deserved the long standing ovation it received.

Area officials log communication problems to Murphy

By Bob Briggs
Mariner Correspondent

Local governments need a more effective liaison to the state.

That was the message that Evelyn Murphy, a candidate for Lt. Governor gave to a Sunday morning gathering of fifteen officials from six South Shore towns.

Officials from Cohasset, Hingham, Weymouth, Marshfield, Scituate and Hull listened to Murphy's ideas and voiced their own opinions of what they thought were the major problems facing local governments.

Murphy is trying to bring a new definition to a post that has been an enigma to many people.

According to the candidate, "the state (government) is the most important government in our lives." With this in mind, the former State Secretary of Economic Affairs is meeting with local officials and asking them "What would towns and cities ask of a Lt. Governor?"

With this premise, the next hour had officials explaining their problems and how the lieutenant governor could help them solve these problems. The two main areas of discussion were money and coordinating state level relations to local government.

Hingham selectman John Brady said the town is still waiting for the 40 percent of the state surplus promised five years ago. Some of the state funding that towns do receive cannot be counted on and plans are often made around the funding. Another problem that the towns face is how to spend the money they will receive.

Murphy said that as lieutenant governor she would ask the governor to start the 40 percent payback but that "it would take the passage of a law." As far as spending any future revenue, she was intrigued with the suggestion from one official that towns should have a mandated priority list for surplus spending.

"We need help dealing with increasing development" was one of the main concerns of Hingham Planning Board member Joan Oates. She would like to see more coordination between all the independent state agencies a developing town might deal with.

Constantine Constatantinides, a member of the Scituate Planning Board and former selectman, pointed out, "Towns are now finding that there are more regional problems concerning planning and environmental questions." This forces local governments to work with a number of state agencies at once.

This lack of coordination at the state level is a problem that Murphy has heard about everywhere she has been. She sees the lieutenant governor helping to coordinate the agencies' efforts. The position can also lend credibility and respect to groups when they need it, whether they are at the state or local levels.

The final major role for the lieutenant governor's office that was discussed was that as an advocate for the municipalities, especially in the legislature. "We have no advocate in state government," said Brady. Murphy would like to change this. She sees that the office could be the advocate that local officials need.

Murphy will continue to hold these meetings throughout her campaign. She does not know exactly how she will deal with these problems, yet. As primary day draws closer, she is getting a better idea of the needs of local government. She thinks that a liaison between the state and the municipalities is something that is needed and will benefit everyone.

Richard Bowen, chairman of the Scituate selectmen, summed up the forum quite well. He thinks that the meetings are "a very good idea. Meeting with local officials throughout the state will eventually allow her to focus in on and deal with the one or two main problems faced by local governments."

Nantasket bicycle race set for Sept. 1

The eighth Annual Nantasket Beach Bicycle Race, to benefit the Saint Vincent de Paul Society, with assistance from Cohasset Cyclesports, will be held Monday morning, Labor Day, September 1 at 8 a.m.

This race, a 25km (15.5 miles) event tours the towns of Hingham, Hull, and Cohasset. The route is challenging, and filled with New England's coastal beauty. The competitors will ride on excellent pavement, over moderate hills along the shore. In previous years many family teams have participated successfully. Men's winning times are in 35:30 range for the 15.5 mile course. Winning women's times are in the vicinity of 37:30.

This year's race will be the first directed by John Wilkie, the new owner of Cohasset Cyclesports. T-shirts, donated by Cohasset Cyclesports will be awarded to all entrants who pre-register.

Following the race will be the award ceremony. Trophies will be awarded to the first Man, Women, and Veteran (40 and over) finishers. Race winners will again be honored by inscription of their names on the St. Vincent trophy. Gift certificates will also be presented to lucky race entrants who are chosen from a random drawing and free refreshments will be provided after the race for all participants.

The race will begin at 8 a.m. sharp, rain or shine at the M.D.C. parking lot on George Washington Boulevard behind the former location of the Giant Roller Coaster, Paragon Park, Nantasket Beach, MA. Check-in and post-registration will be from 6:30 to 7:30 a.m., sharp. Riders are urged to pre-register before Aug. 20, by mail to the address indicated on the race application form. If registration forms are not available at your local merchant, to receive them by mail, please call (617) 383-0707 and leave your name, full address with zip, phone number and how many forms needed.

Refunds will not be allowed due to unsafe equipment. Bicycles must pass the mandatory safety inspection and riders are urged to have their bicycle professionally checked for safe operation before race day. Brakes, tires, running gear, and loose parts will be closely scrutinized. Bicycles that do not pass safety inspection will not be allowed to race, and no exceptions will be made. Protective headgear designed for bicycle racing is also mandatory.

Entry forms for this event may be obtained at your local bike shop or merchant. The entry fee is $10, and the field will be limited to the first 750 entrants. All proceeds benefit the St. Vincent de Paul Society, a non-profit charitable organization which gives help to those in need, especially during the holiday seasons.

Swimmers post landslide victory over Duxbury

By Jay Santini
Special to the Mariner

In their second meet of the season, the Cohasset Swim Team posted a landslide victory Friday over the Duxbury Yacht Club.

Duxbury came equipped with some impressive swimmers, but were unable to fill many of the 14- and 16-and-under events. The result was a number of races with only Cohasset swimmers in the water.

The 16-and-under diving started things rolling as Carrie Ripley and Amy Hobbs took first and second respectively. Kate de Lima managed second in the 12-and-under competition, and Cohasset built an early lead.

It was clear from the start who would set the pace in the meet, as Cohasset took first and second in the first five events. From then on there were only eight races in which Cohasset swimmers finished lower than third.

Although Duxbury didn't match up with the numbers, at times they did show Cohasset swimmers some needed competition for excellent individual performances.

Thomas Greco, Danny Baird and Billy Baird, all having been away the past two weeks, still managed to rake in 21 combined individual points. Greco took three individual eight-and-under events, as well as contributing to a first place in the eight-and-under mixed freestyle relay. Danny Baird placed second in the boys 12-and-under freestyle, as well as helping two relay teams to victory. Billy Baird swam to second place in a close boys 14-and-under breaststyle race. At 43.1 seconds, he cut four seconds off his last time. He was narrowly defeated by teammate Greg Nourie who himself finished in fine form with a 42.4.

Nourie also took another first and a second individually, as well as joining Baird, Colin Knox and Joel Whitman for first place in the 14-and-under medley relay. Knox finished out the day with two seconds in individual events and deserves note for an outstanding effort in the 14-and-under individual medley.

Whitman did a personal best of 27.3 to win the 14-and-under freestyle. He also had a banner day, taking home four firsts, despite feeling slightly ill.

Other swimmers who performed especially well include Amy Hobbs, who grabbed four blue ribbons, and Carrie Ripley, who swam to victory in the 14-and-under breaststroke and did it again two events later defeating Veronica Devos in the 16-and-under breaststroke. Devos narrowly missed first and would have turned in an excellent time had she not been disqualified on the touch at the end.

In the girls 12-and-under individual medley Maureen Long was a surprise, taking a close second to Robin Devito.

One of the most exciting races of the meet was the boys 16-and-under breaststroke. Peter Buckley edged out Matt Buckley for first by a fingertip in what easily could have gone as a tie. (They tied in the same event last week against Scituate K. of C.).

All the swimmers did well, and there were some surprises.

Annie Henry returns from Arizona national swim group

By Carol Henry
Special to the Mariner

Annie Henry, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Wm. Henry of 94 N. Main St., Cohasset has spent the past year in Mesa, Arizona training in synchronized swimming with a nationally ranked age group team coached by Linda Lichter.

Litcher was aquatic director at Yale University and coached a synchronized swim team in Conn. before moving to Arizona three years ago. She is a nationally rated swimming judge.

Annie's mom, Carol, also spent the year in Arizona and helped coach the Mesa team and judged at all the state and regional meets. In March she and Linda attended a very educational swimmers and coaches clinic in Colorado Springs at the Olympic Training Center. She also attended the U.S. Aquatic Sports Convention in Phoenix last fall, took classes and then passed the two levels of the U.S. Coaching Certification Program.

Annie attended Rhodes Junior High School in Mesa which is conveniently located across the street from their apartment complex. Annie found the adjustment to eighth grade to be a difficult one. The school of three grades has an enrollment of more than 1500 students and her classes were large. However, her adjustment to the team was an easier one.

The girls, coaches and parents welcomed her. She and her mom felt an immediate unity and team spirit. Annie's practice schedule was from 4-6:30 p.m. Monday-Friday, and 8-10 a.m. Saturdays with a private lesson for an hour Sundays. In the summer the team practices from 5-8 a.m. Monday-Friday and 8-10 a.m. on Saturday. The girls also take weight training, dance and aerobics for another two hours, four days a week in preparation for the summer national meets.

In the state of Arizona Annie and her duet partner, Emily Porter of Mesa were undefeated in the 13/14 age group. Their routine was written by Linda Lichter for a MacDonald's sponsored live televised show presented last August at the Broadmore Hotel in Colorado Springs. The show was performed by eight members of the U.S. Synchro, Swim Team with live music by the Air Force Academy Band.

Annie's mom rewrote the routine using some of the original music and some new pieces. (Competition swimming must conform to more rigid rules and is quite different from free-style or exhibition swimming.) This duet placed first in Boulder, Colorado on June 15th at the U.S. Junior Olympic Regional Meet which, after also winning the state meet, qualified the girls for the U.S. Junior Olympic Nationals being held in St. Louis the 7th-10th of August. The J.O.'s are sponsored by Sears and take place in almost every sport with participating athletes from 13-18 years of age.

Annie will also be swimming with the 15-18 age team at J.O. Nationals. The routine of eight girls also got a gold medal in Boulder. The Mesa team swept the meet placing first in every 13/14 and 15/16 event qualifying a solo, duet, trio and routine of eight for the team event making a total of eight routines from the Mesa club going to the national meet — an unheard of triumph for the team and their coaches.

Annie's dad was at the meet where Annie also received a silver medal in the 13/14 figures (each swimmer must perform six figures for the judges and this score is added to their routine score). There were 46 swimmers in the 13/14 age group. Annie also won a bronze medal in the 13/14 solo event which her mom helped write and coach. This made a total of four medals to present to her dad on Father's Day — a wonderful gift for her dad who hadn't seen her in three months.

After returning from Boulder, the team of eight girls including Annie gave a demonstration in Phoenix with Tracie Ruiz. The double gold medal winner at the L.A. Olympic Games in synchro attracted 15,000 spectators for this show and clinic.

The week of July 4, Annie and Carol were in Denver at the International Age Group Championships. There were 50 teams there representing almost every state plus two teams from Canada and one from Seoul, Korea. Annie swam in the 15-18 age team event and they placed fourth in figures and eighth overall. This team routine placed first in Arizona and first in the sectional meet in Long Beach, California last March. Their eighth place win was a good effort for a young team of 13/14 and 15/16 year old swimmers. An 11/12 age group duet which Carol helped write and coach placed eighth overall. There were 16 girls from the Mesa team at this meet and these same swimmers also qualified for the Junior Olympic Nationals.

Annie is planning to return to Arizona for another year of training and her mom plans to spend at least half of the year with her. It has been an exciting year for both of them but it has been difficult being away from a town they love and separated from famiy and friends. It was a hard decision to reach.

Annie and Carol would like to thank all the friends at home who have been so supportive in this venture. They will be returning to Cohasset after The Junior Olympic Games in St. Louis. "We have missed Cohasset and feel very fortunate to live in such an unusually beautiful and protective environment and appreciate, even more than we did before, all the advantages with which we have been blessed. Also our sincere thanks to the Mariner for last summer's send-off article by Karen Cubie with pictures by Carol McCann," Carol said.

Annie's older brother, Bill left for Los Angeles last June after graduating from Bates College Memorial Day, 1985. He was an apprentice editor on the T.V. movie, "The Long Hot Summer," starring Don Johnson and directed by Stuart Cooper, Carol Henry's first cousin. His last editing job was as assistant on a movie to be released this fall produced by The Talking Heads music group.

Charlie Henry is presently attending Brewster Academy where he will begin his junior year in the fall. The school is located in Wolfeboro, N.H. He was a member of the fall soccer team and on the varsity sailing team last spring. He was one of six students at the school who received an early return invitation which is voted on by all the faculty and administration. He also received the academic effort award for the winter term. Charlie is presently teaching sailing at the Cohasset Yacht Club.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS THE TRIAL COURT THE PROBATE AND FAMILY COURT DEPARTMENT
Norfolk Division
Docket No. 86E0081-P1

To John W. Hobbs of Sandwich in the County of Barnstable, Braintree Savings Bank of Braintree in the County of Norfolk, and to all other persons interested.

A petition has been presented to said Court by Roella T. Hobbs of Cohasset in the County, of Norfolk representing that she holds as tenant in common an undivided part or share of certain land lying in Cohasset in said County and briefly described as follows:

Parcel 1: NORTHWESTERLY: by STATION STREET, 82.12 feet; NORTHERLY: by a curve at the junction of STATION STREET and SOUTH MAIN STREET, 16.09 feet; NORTHEASTERLY: by SOUTH MAIN STREET, 61.74 feet; SOUTHWESTERLY: by the second parcel, hereinafter described, 71.79 feet. Said land is shown on a "Plan of Land in Cohasset, Mass. March 15, 1923..." RECORDED WITH NORFOLK DEEDS as No. 1923-148, in BOOK 1551, PAGE 104. Said parcel containing 6,500 square feet, more or less.

Parcel 2: The full one hundred percent interest of the deceased in a second parcel of land situated in Cohasset, Norfolk County, of which parcel the deceased was the sole owner at the time of her decease, bounded and described as follows: NORTHWESTERLY: by STATION STREET, 10.00 feet; NORTHEASTERLY: by the first parcel hereinbefore described, 71.79 feet; SOUTHEASTERLY: by land now or formerly of Catherine L. St. John, 10.00 feet; and SOUTHWESTERLY: by land formerly of Grace M. Tilden, 71.79. Containing 700 square feet, more or less, Said second parcel is likewise shown on a "Plan of Land in Cohasset, Mass; March 15, 1923...", recorded with NORFOLK DEEDS as No. 1923-148, in Book 1551 Page 104 setting forth that she desires that — all — of said land may be sold at private sale for not less than six hundred thousand dollars and praying that partition may be made of all the land aforesaid according to law, and to that end that a commissioner be appointed to make such partition and be ordered to make sale and conveyance of all, or any part of said land which the Court finds cannot be advantageously divided, either at private sale or public auction, and be ordered to distribute the net proceeds thereof.

If you desire to object thereto, you or your attorney should file a written appearance in said Court at Dedham before ten o'clock in the forenoon on the sixth day of August 1986, the return day of this citation.

Witness, ROBERT M. FORD, Esquire, First Justice of said Court, this twenty-fourth day of June 1986.

July 27 carillon concert

Carlo van Ulft, City Carillonneur of Venlo, The Netherlands, will perform a free recital on the 51 bell Jessie M. Barron Memorial Carillon at St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, 16 Highland Avenue, Cohasset, Sunday, July 27 at 6 p.m.

His program will include music by Mozart as well as arrangements of popular songs and Dutch folk songs.

Bring your lawn chairs, blankets, and picnic suppers to Cohasset Common for this 5th recital of the summer series. Printed programs are available.

Driving from the North or West, take Route 3 to Route 228 and follow signs to Cohasset.

For further information call St. Stephen's Church at 383-1083.

Summer garden tour

The Marshfield Organic Gardeners are planning their summer tour of notable gardens. The informal group meets to car-pool to several gardens, then enjoys refreshments and a chance to discuss planting successes and problems.

The Gardeners' annual calendar includes this tour, a dinner in the fall, a winter seed exchange and a spring plant swap. Members are also notified of such special events as the May visit to Heritage Plantation in Sandwich.

Anyone interested in gardening is invited to join, whether your methods are organic or not. The meetings are an excellent chance to share information and pick up tips from area green thumbers.

To join, send your name and mailing address and a dollar to Betty Dubois, 534 Ferry St., Marshfield, MA 02050.

Quilting demonstrators

Quilting demonstrators are being scheduled by the Country Arts Committee of the Marshfield Fair. Demonstrators will work in three hour shifts, starting at 11 a.m. Wednesday August 13 through Sunday Aug. 24. They will quilt the prize winning blocks of the 1986 "Hearts in burgundy and rose" international quilt block contest.

You do not have to be an award-winning quilter to help at the Fair. If you enjoy quilting, it is a delightful opportunity to meet and work with other quilters, and see both the 1985 and 1986 winning blocks. Demonstrators will be given full instructions, a parking permit and a pass to enter the Fair.

For more information, or to volunteer, you may call Peggy Beals at 834-4045.

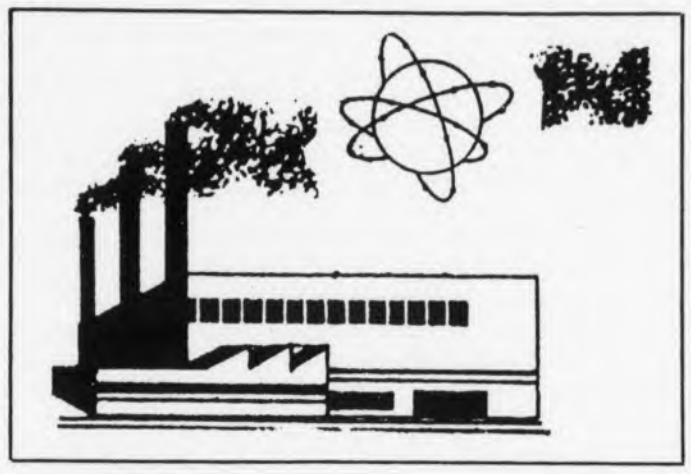
Pilgrim's problems outlined in NRC report

Editor's note: The following is a synopsis of a report by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission on the Pilgrim nuclear power plant in Plymouth.

The report was made available by Congressman Edward Markey of Massachusetts who describes the Pilgrim facility as "a problem plagued plant."

A congressional hearing on the plant and its problems was held July 16.



PILGRIM STATION
Docket No. 50-309
REGULATORY PERFORMANCE HISTORY
A tabulation of significant milestones and enforcement actions.

☐ June 1972: Issued operating license.

☐ December 1973: Shutdown order issued to inspect for and repair fuel channel box damage.

☐ December 1974: Fuel failure: Hydriding and pellet-clad interaction failures resulted in high gaseous activity. Operation with the fuel cladding perforations resulted in high dose rates in locations requiring access for operation and maintenance. During 1975, 76 and 77, power was limited between 60-80 percent to maintain offgas activity within regulatory requirements. The last of the defective fuel bundles was replaced during the 1977 refueling outage.

☐ May 1975: A $12,000 penalty assessed for violations concerning inservice inspection activities identified during an inspection conducted December 1974 - February 1975.

☐ March 1978: A $16,000 penalty assessed for violations. The violations were: over-exposure of one individual; failure to instruct personnel in accordance with 10 CFR 19; failure to perform required air sampling, and failure to follow procedures.

☐ October 1979: A $5,000 penalty assessed for a violation involving a failure to follow the security plan.

☐ February 1980: A $5,000 penalty assessed for shipping radioactive materials with external radiation levels in excess of regulatory limits.

☐ April 1981: A $13,000 penalty assessed for events surrounding movement of irradiated fuel without secondary containment.

☐ July 1981: A management meeting was held in July 1981 to discuss concerns for TMI Action Plan Items involving post accident sampling procedures and equipment and an Immediate Action Letter was issued regarding implementation of these items. Meeting was prompted by a June 1981 radiation protection inspection that found the licensee failed to conform with NRC criteria in connection with four of the five category A items inspected.

☐ June-September 1981: Inspections identified six problems: inoperable combustible gas control system; failure to perform an adequate 50.59 review; failure to provide appropriate procedures and drawings; failure to make a report required by Technical Specifications; failure to provide accurate information to NRC; and failure to satisfy a Limiting Condition for Operation (LCO) regarding primary containment isolation valves. These inspections were subsequently the subject of enforcement actions taken in January 1982.

☐ July-August 1981: A Performance Appraisal Inspection found six of eight areas examined below average. These were: committee activities; quality assurance audits; maintenance; corrective action systems; licensed and non-licensed training; and procurement. Plant operations and design changes and modifications were found to be average; however, significant weaknesses were identified in both areas.

☐ January 1982: Civil $550,000 penalty assessed for failure to comply with requirements; submittal of false information to NRC and subsequent delay of notification to NRC of known inaccurate information; and failure to comply with LCO for RCIC containment isolation valves.

Order modifying license required licensee to submit a comprehensive plan of action that would yield an independent appraisal of site and corporate management, recommendations for improvements in management controls and oversight, and a review of previous compliance with NRC requirements.

☐ January 1982: Inspection report identified a severity level III violation for transporation of radioactive materials with liquid in the containers. This violation was based on an inspection in August 1981 by the State of South Carolina which resulted in issuance of a $1,000 penalty.

☐ June 1982: A special inspection conducted after radioactive spent resin was found on roof tops and pavement within the protected area. No violations identified. Confirmatory Action Letter issued concerning actions to be taken regarding the spent resin.

☐ August 1983: A shutdown order was issued requiring the licensee to shutdown in December 1983 and inspect the recirculation system piping for intergranular stress corrosion cracking. It required them to remain in cold shutdown until authorized to restart by the Director of NRR. The licensee replaced the recirculation system piping and was authorized to restart in December 1984.

☐ January 1984: Confirmatory Action Letter issued regarding licensee actions relative to health physics practices following the discovery of small, highly radioactive sources in the control rod drive repair room.

☐ February 1984: Enforcement conference regarding the uncontrolled handling of small, highly radioactive sources in the control rod drive repair room.

☐ April 1984: A $40,000 penalty assessed for problems in connection with the uncontrolled handling of small, highly radioactive sources in the control rod drive repair room between January 14 and 18, 1984. The violation involved identified problems with the labeling of containers, the use of extremity dosimetry, and the adequacy of instructions given to individuals working in the repair room.

☐ September 1984: Management meeting to discuss a second instance of the uncontrolled presence of small, highly radioactive sources in the control rod drive repair room.

☐ October 1984: Enforcement conference on the unplanned extremity exposure (within regulatory limits) connected with the small, highly radioactive sources in the control rod drive repair room.

Confirmatory Action Letter issued in connection with recurring radiation protection program weaknesses. The letter outlined licensee plans for evaluating and correcting these weaknesses.

☐ November 1984: An order modifying the license was issued in connection with recurring weaknesses in the radiation protection program. The order required the licensee to complete an independent contractor assessment of the radiological controls program and to submit to NRC review and approval a Radiological Improvement Plan (RIP) for upgrading the radiological controls program. Followup inspections conducted in May, August, and November 1985 and April 1986.

A Severity Level III violation (no civil penalty) was issued for failure to perform radiation surveys; failure to instruct workers in accordance with 10 CFR 19; and failure to properly implement a procedure in connection with the unplanned exposure noted above.

☐ August 1985: Enforcement conference to discuss licensee's action on abnormal surveillance test results and a degraded vital area barrier.

☐ October 1985: A $50,000 penalty was assessed for the degradation of a vital area barrier.

☐ November 1985: A safety system functional team inspection was conducted by the Office of Inspection and Enforcement to assess the operational readiness and function of selected safety systems. The inspection identified that the licensee had not effectively mitigated a water hammer problem associated with the HPCI turbine exhaust line which had been occurring since the beginning of plant operation. Weaknesses were also identified with the licensee's design change process; control of plant instrumentation; handling of vendor information; program for approving and validating emergency operating procedures; capability to conduct a plant shutdown from outside the control room; and maintenance program for motor operated valves.

☐ February 1986: Inspection report identified a severity level III violation for failure to meet packaging requirements for low specific activity radioactive materials. This violation was based on an inspection in January 1986 by the State of South Carolina which resulted in issuance of a penalty of $1,000.

☐ February-March 1986: A special diagnostic team inspection was conducted to determine the underlying reasons for the licensee's poor performance described in the most recent SALP and to ascertain whether they could have an adverse impact on the safety of plant operations.

☐ April 1986: An Augumented Inspection Team (AIT) conducted an inspection of recent operational events which included, 1) the spurious group one primary containment isolations (and associated reactor scrams) that occurred April 4 and 12, 1986, 2) the failure of the main stream isolation valves to promptly reopen after the containment isolations, and 3) the recurring pressurizations of the residual heat removal system. The AIT found the licensee's evaluations following the second event to be carefully structured and thorough. A Confirmatory Action Letter concerning the events was issued which required the licensee to provide a written report prior to restart containing the results of the evaluation and corrective actions. The CAL also required Regional Administrator authorization for restart.

Inspection reviewed implementation of the RIP. The inspection found the licensee adequately addressed 13 of the 34 items reviewed.

☐ June 1986: The first in a planned series of management meetings scheduled to review BECo management oversight of the implementation of the licensee improvement programs in progress.

Store magazine reaction mixed to anti-pornography report

By Bob Briggs
Mariner Correspondent

It has been a little over two weeks since the Meese Commission released its anti-pornography report and the intitial resulting effects are still being felt.

The report, which links pornography with sexual violence, makes 92 recommendations for state and national officials to act on.

Most public reaction has been heard on the national and editorial levels. Feminist groups, civil rights groups and newspaper editors are among those who have attacked the commission. They are not necessarily in favor of pornography, but do not like to see censorship and what one feminist leader calls "one more act in a policy of stripping Americans of our civil rights and liberties."

So far the commission's report has done damage to two of the biggest selling adult magazines.

Pressure from the commission caused Southland Corporation to take "Playboy", "Penthouse" and "Forum," a sister publication of "Penthouse," off the shelves of 4,500 7-Eleven stores. Rite Aid, a national drugstore chain soon followed suit.

The CVS drugstore chain also recently decided to stop selling the three magazines. They deny that this decision was based on the commission's threat to print a list of every store or chain's name that sold the magazines.

When a federal judge ruled against this modern day "black listing," the commission urged a boycott of any store selling the magazines.

This "urged boycott" might cause some problems to local businesses. Most stores are taking a "wait and see" approach to the whole situation. In fact, of fifteen area local stores polled, only three were willing to answer questions concerning the sale of adult magazines.

Workers and managers of the other twelve stores either did not want to comment on the issue or were instructed not to talk to reporters about it.

The three that did answer questions all stressed the same point: individual freedom of choice.

Ross Briden, a worker at the Hingham 7-Eleven, said that two years ago they pulled all but the two main adult magazines.

Now he thinks that they "will probably keep both, at least at this store."

Asked for his own personal view, Briden reponded, "I don't care either way. I don't read them, but it should be up to the person involved."

According to Joe O'Connor, owner of a Dairy Mart in Weymouth, "If someone wants to purchase an adult magazine and they are an adult, they deserve the right to do so."

Like Briden, O'Connor doesn't read adult magazines, but he does not like the idea of someone telling him what he can and cannot sell.

"They did the same thing (to a certain extent) to the adult film business," said O'Connor. "I just think it should be everyone's choice." He will continue to offer the magazines.

Hubbard's Cupboard in Marshield offers seven titles for sale, all discreetly placed under the counter and only for sale to adults who ask for them.

Manager Brian Doyle said, "We sell between 40-50 magazines a month and will continue to offer them."

Acknowledging he "hadn't been keeping uptodate on the report," he did think that "the whole thing was bordering on censorship."

The effects of the report have been felt at other stores. Six months ago, when the commission was starting to make headlines, Lil Peach, a 58 store chain on the North and South Shores, decided to pull all titles except for "Playboy" and "Penthouse" from their shelves. Christy's, another chain of convenient stores has cut back their offerings to six or eight different magazines.

In all these stores that offer any adult magazines, the magazines are kept behind the counter and have to be asked for.

Local businesses just have to decide whether the money involved with any bad publicity or possible boycott is more important than the freedom of choice.

According to the people who were willing to talk about the subject, the freedom of choice seems to be more important.

Politicus — by David A. Mittell, Jr.

The Old Mike Dukakis, Thank Goodness

Like the red bellied turtle of Plymouth County there are awfully few of us to be found. We are the misanthropic misfits who actually liked the Old Gov. Mike Dukakis better than the New. Alas, we have spent the eighties enduring the public relations, the coalition-building, the pap, and the spectacle of constant apology about the Old bold Dukakis by the chastened, unctuous New.

But good things sometimes come to those who wait patiently—in his handling of would-be Chancellor of Higher Education James Collins, the governor has treated us to a vintage performance straight from the Old Dukakis. He has been rude, he has been abrasive, he has been insensitive, he has been honorable, and he has been right!

The great issue involved is, as one observer succinctly put it, whether public higher education in Massachusetts will or will not function between now and the millennium in the manner of the Registry of Motor Vehicles, which (seemingly for millennia) has been a haven for washed up political bums and legislative alumni.

Now, there's a term—"legislative alumni"—that the general reader doesn't understand the meaning of at all. To legislators the alumni are the "old boys" of the legislature, in short former legislators. They are called "alumni" as though they had gone to Harrow or Yale instead of filling a parking space on Beacon Hill for a number of years.

Of itself there is nothing wrong with this slightly inflated appellation. We all know there could not possibly have been as many "colonels" in the army as there are old men who accept the title in retirement; yet no one takes offense unless the fellow purports to run for governor, as "Colonel" Switzler did.

But what is quite wrong about the word "alumni" in this context is the attitude, largely concealed from the public, that legislators have about their former colleagues. For, it is an unwritten law on Beacon Hill that when the public teat is to be milked, that is to say, when cushy, high-paying jobs are to be dispensed, interested "alumni" come first and before the merely qualified. So strong is this law of tradition that party affiliation, ideology, past feuds, and present hatreds all are set aside in deference to the concept of alumni-preference. This law, moreover, is immutable—it obtains under Speaker Keverian as it obtained under Speaker McGee as it obtained under the legendary rogue the late Speaker John Thompson.

Thus it is that a James Collins, the now former state representative from Amherst, who was nearly as rotten a student in law school as I was at Harvard, who has functioned primarily as the legislative voice of the Massachusetts Teachers Assocation, finds himself nominated as the Chancellor of Public Higher Education overseeing all the state's universities, colleges, and community colleges.

Gov. Dukakis, who served in the legislature, understands that on the tribal level on which the legislature functions, the Beacon Hill crowd will take care of its own. But he also understands that if the legislature gets away with putting a minimally qualified "alumnus" in the top education post in the state to the exclusion of several apparently better qualified candidates, the University of Massachusetts in all its divisions runs the risk of degenerating into the private job-filling warren of the Massachusetts House and Senate.

This, then, is a test case. If your kid can't get into Harvard or if you can't afford B.U.'s staggering tuition, will your kid have to settle for a state college where ex-reps and their cronies call the shots? Or can the University of Massachusetts hope to grow in stature to the point where it offers low-cost higher education whose excellence approaches that of the University of California under its legendary chancellor Clark Kerr?

Gov. Dukakis also understands and asserts that James Collins may not be unqualified for the job. But the fact that Collins is not obviously qualified, the fact that there are others who are more apparently qualified, the fact that the selection process was aborted in order to appoint him, and the fact that the legislature is trying to prop him up permanently in office because he is one of their own, all combine to dictate that he should not get the appointment. If he does, if Speaker Keverian prevails in this matter over Gov. Dukakis, the principle will be established that higher education functions in the same manner as the Registry of Motor Vehicles.

That cannot be allowed to happen. Under Clark Kerr himself public higher education would be in trouble in Massachusetts between now and the turn of the century. Enrollment is going to decline every year for the next decade due to the low birthrate in the 1970s. Difficult cost-cutting decisions will have to be made. Programs will have to be restructured to serve more middle-aged, working, and married students. The competition for good students and good faculty will get fiercer. To begin such an era with a political appointment shoddily done would be a disaster.

One must have some sympathy for Collins. By all accounts he has been a fine legislator. One must concede that nation-wide searches often come up with clods, and that Collins might have been the best man for the job. Had he been willing to stand down when the governor of his own party asked him to, had he then submitted himself and his qualifications to proper scrutiny, and had he then been selected in due course, I don't think the governor could rightly have objected.

Unfortunately, Collins would not honor his governor's request; instead he chose to play a game of "chicken" with the governor. He resigned his legislative seat in order to assume office as chancellor despite the fact he has no contract to go to work. He is making the argument that the voice vote of the regents naming him chancellor is itself a binding contract—thus, as it would appear, positioning himself to take the matter to court.

Nothing would be worse for the interest of higher education in Massachusetts than a courtroom scene after the fashion of the Red Sox and Buddy LeRoux. Nor could anything be a worse example for the student population Collins would like to lead than the spectacle of a man helping himself to a chancellorship and telling a governor he serves, and with whom he has no important philosophical differences, to be damned.

A chancellor of higher education ought to know the meaning of humility. He ought to know how to set an example by showing deference. Collins in my view has only shown that he knows how to help himself. He has overreached. He has got to go, and the legislature's attempt to involve higher education in its continuing plan to hand out goodies to its own alumni has got to be quashed by public opinion.

Gov. Dukakis understands that, thank goodness. He is said to have appointed some hacks of his own to education positions, and he may have. But that is here irrelevant. In defending the integrity of the top job in education he is acting with honor and he should be supported.

FROM THE KITCHEN by JOAN PINKHAM

Some culinary delights on a summer's day

Have you ever thought how popular we become when winter is a thing of the past? Suddenly it doesn't seem like such a long drive when a visit from out-of-town includes a chance to share our beaches.

When friends reappear with the summer sun, you just can't let them make that long, hot return trip on an empty stomach.

So, while they're basking on the golden sands, you might find yourself relegated to the kitchen. Depending on the scope of your new-found popularity, you may want to make more than one of Beth Gardner's recipe for this easy, tasty

CHEESEBURGER PIE

1 pound ground beef
1/2 c. ea. evaporated milk, catsup
1/3 c. fine dry bread crumbs
1/4 c. chopped onion
3/4 tsp. salt
1/2 tsp. dried oregano, crushed
1/8 tsp. pepper
1 8" unbaked pastry shell
4 oz. American cheese, shredded (1 cup)
1 tsp. Worcestershire sauce

Combine all ingredients except cheese and Worcestershire. Spread in unbaked pastry shell. Bake in 350 oven for 35 to 40 min. Toss together cheese and Worcestershire; spread on top of meat mixture. Bake 10 min. longer. Let stand for 10 min. before serving. Serves six.

On a rainy summer's day when the beach and garden are not luring you outdoors, why not liven up the scene by trying out a sinfully calorie-laden dessert? If by chance there is anyone who is not on some sort of diet, this cake which I have made more than once after cutting it out of the paper many moons ago, is just the thing if you are among the many choca-holics who have thrown dieting to the winds while on vacation.

DARK CHOCOLATE CAKE

1 box (1 lb. 3 oz.) deep chocolate cake mix
Family-size box (l lb. 6 oz.) fudge brownie mix
1/3 c. mayonnaise
1 1/3 c., plus 1/4 cups of water
4 eggs

Put cake and brownie mixes and mayonnaise into large bowl of mixer. Add 1 1/3 c. water and eggs. Beat until blended, scraping bowl often. Add remaining 1/4 c. water and beat 2 min. more at high speed. Note: Water and eggs should equal the amount called for on brownie and cake mix packages. Grease and flour a 10" tube pan, or 12x9x2" pan. Bake at 350 degrees for 1 to 1 1/4 hours, or until done.

A more important summer dessert for those who are forever counting calories as we are so painfully aware as we glance at sylph-like beauties parading before us on the beaches, is a summer dessert such as this of

WATERMELONS...ETC.

A large watermelon filled with strawberries, melon balls, pineapple, sweet pitted cherries and other such fruit, marinated in peach cordial, makes a delightful ending to a barbecue...Now, when raspberries and peaches are at their tastiest, they are good served with a custard flavored with sherry, kept handy in the fridge. Sour cream, slightly thinned with cream or juices, makes a good topping for berries, too.

Time was when clams and mussels were ours for the digging, when a permit from the local town hall was all you needed to go out on the flats and dig a pailful of steamers for that night's meal. Now, because of water pollution, we have to buy the ingredients for such dishes as Florence Murphy's

MUSHROOM-SHRIMP SCAMPI

1 c. olive oil
1/4 c. butter
3T parsley flakes
1 clove garlic, minced
1 pound or 12-oz. bag frozen shrimp
2 or 3 green peppers, sliced
1 onion, cut in pieces
1 lb. fresh mushrooms, sliced
1 c. dry white wine

To first four ingredients which are warmed in a large skillet, add next four ingredients. Cover and simmer 15 or 20 min. Add wine, simmer and stir occasionally, for 20 min. more.

Public safety around Pilgrim plant must be ensured

"Ensuring public safety must continue to be the single most important concern" regarding any decision to re-open the Pilgrim Nuclear Power Plant in Plymouth, said Gov. Michael Dukakis recently.

Dukakis' testimony was delivered by state Energy Secretary Sharon M. Pollard during a hearing by the U.S. House Subcommittee on Energy Conservation and Power in Washington.

"We have one priority," the governor said in his statement, "and that is to ensure that the public safety is not compromised or threatened. No other issue surrounding Pilgrim can be discussed until we are sure that the public's safety is ensured."

Dukakis' testimony noted the plant's poor operating record, and he criticized Boston Edison for its pattern of mismanagement with respect to the plant's operations, maintenance, security and radiological control systems.

"The safe operation of a nuclear power plant is difficult enough when all systems are operating at their most optimum levels," the governor said. "But when questions are raised about the most basic responsibilities in the operation of a nuclear power plant, it is our obligation as public officials to see that the public safety is assured."

Dukakis said that the regional Nuclear Regulatory Commission office has acted responsibly in fulfilling its mandate to protect public safety," but he s aid the agency responsible for regulating nuclear power plants throughout the nation "as a whole must still be more aggressive in regulating nuclear power plants."

The governor said that "public health and safety ought to be the only criteria that govern decisions regarding restarting the plant. Our position here in Massachsuetts is that the Pilgrim plant should not go back on line until Boston Edison's management team is functioning properly and until it has taken steps to resolve the problems identified by the NRC."

Dukakis said that "based on regional utility projections, we believe that there will be sufficient power supplies to meet peak load demand this summer."

NEARLY NATIVE — by DARRELL BERGER

'Mommy, do we need this bug?'

An eight-year-old friend of mine recently walked into her kitchen vigorously shaking a jar containing several ants.

"What are you doing?" her mother asked.

"I'm trying to make them dizzy," she replied, "so they won't feel any pain when I pull their legs off."

It seems my friend had developed a great curiosity toward biology, especially what makes moving creatures move. Her mother had told her several times that it was cruel to simply pull insects apart. Her daughter's attempt at making the ants dizzy was a reasonable and humane decision from her perspective.

The flaw in her logic is obvious to adults, and her well-meaning compromise between scientific inquiry and compassion is admirable. Yet this same flaw is often found in adults' use and misue of animals.

Consider the recent decision that Canada is finally making to stop the clubbing the baby harp seals. The "harvesting" is being stopped because seals are becoming an endangered species, not because officials found the clubbing inhumane.

Clubbing seal pups, they concluded, was no less humane than the methods of killing used in slaughterhouses.

Probably so. Yet they did not take the next step and ask whether, and by what standards, the slaughterhouse killings were humane.

If an eight-year-old is cruel when trying not to be, it is excusable. When governments reason no better than eight-year-olds, it is not.

The same girl once asked, "Mommy, do we need this bug?" Her mother did not quite understand what she was being asked.

"Remember when I asked you if I could kill that spider and you said no because we needed spiders because they killed mosquitoes?" the girl explained. "Well, do we need this bug? Does it do anything for us?"

This questions required a lengthier discussion. Mother tried to teach an important lesson: that spiders, those scary, ugly creatures, are very important to humans, that they have a right to live just like the rest of us. The value of mosquitoes, of course, is an even more troublesome proposition.

However, as children will, daughter was unable to generalize from that particular spider to all spiders, or other life forms.

As a result, mother was, well, bugged for several days with questions as to whether specific spiders, ants or lady bugs were of any use.

Once again, we excuse a child for not grasping the fine points of ecology, and applaud mother for her attempts and patience at teaching them.

And again, we are dismayed at how often adults and society haven't learned even as much as the little girl.

Is a plant or animal of use to us? Too often this is the only question we ask. Remember the snail darter, that little fish that would become extinct if a certain dam was built in Tennessee?

Remember how much fun certain commentators had ridiculing those who suggested saving the snail darter was a worthy goal?

We don't seem to realize, in either our hearts or our minds, that we cannot exist without a healthy environment, and that we are now destroying it for very selfish, ignorant and narrow uses.

This applies not only to the very bad bargain of nuclear energy, but also to the unchecked burning of fossil fuel.

This applies especially to the destruction of tropical rain forests, which literally are the means of production of the world's oxygen.

This applies to our destruction of millions of cows to support the price of milk products. That we should destroy food for the sake of money while millions starve is the height of human folly and arrogance. We saw it during the Depression and we're seeing it again today.

From a Judeo-Christian perspective we were commanded to be stewards of the earth: caretakers, not exploiters. If evangelists wanted to preach on a sin in which all partake, they would dwell not on differing personal beliefs, but on a terrible breach of contract we have perpetrated against our earthly home.

Life is compromise. Since the beginning of time every life form has depended upon the death of other life forms. We must sometimes kill in order to live.

This was the beginning of religion. Primitive humans recognized the awesome task of altering their environment, whether it be chopping trees, planting crops or killing animals for food and clothing.

Many rituals evolved from the thanking of gods, or asking forgiveness for killing, or sanctifying that which is killed. In doing so tribes came to appreciate the holiness of the animal and its relationship to the human community.

This sense of sacredness has long been absent in the industrial age, which has known only exploitation.

With the passing of the family farm we have already seen agriculture separated from the basic, down-to-earth values of rural families, which knew their debt to the forces of natures.

We need to teach our children that we do need the bugs, and when, of necessity, we take life or alter the environment, we do so with humility and prayerfulness of our responsibility to the living earth.

We also need to teach this lesson to the ever-hungry forces of exploitation, least we find ourselves alone in a barren land.

THE DRAGON'S DUNGEON — By CLAIRE McDONOUGH

Girls are a diamonds best friend?

"Well," I stormed, "throwing the Globe on the floor," Donald Regan has done it again.

"He says that the United States can't impose economic sanctions on South Africa because American women won't be willing to give up their diamonds.

"He thinks we're so anxious to adorn our bodies with chrystalized carbon that we're willing to let human beings suffer deprivation and hardship. Boy am I mad."

"Do you suppose," Skip interjected, "there's any apartheid in Belgium? I'd be perfectly willing to sacrifice my brussels sprouts."

"In a good cause," he added virtuously.

Larry nodded. "Maybe the Commonwealth of Massachusetts could pick a fight with Colorado and we'd have to do without Denver boots."

"This could be the start of something big," Brieda agreed. "The American electronics industry certainly won't object if we stop trading with Japan until they start being nicer to whales. But I'm not sure I understand Mr. Regan. Does he mean Ma has to turn in her engagement ring or does he just mean that we can't get any new diamonds if we don't stay friends with South Africa?"

The Dragon brightened. "Just new diamonds," he told her, then he turned to me.

"I'm aware," he said solemnly, "of how strongly you oppose discrimination of any kind. So I cancelled the diamond necklace I had ordered for your Christmas present. I know you'll only love me more because I'm doing my bit to fight this anachronistic evil."

He brightened even more. "There just might be a business opportunity here. I could sell cards for husbands to give their wives. Something like, 'To clearly register your opposition to the anachronistic evil of apartheid, I have, in your name, refused to buy diamond jewelry of any kind until all people pencil, because everything we said showed up in the Mariner that week. You got an entire article about Donald Regan's comments on women and the arms race. You said the only race the women you knew were interested in was the human race.

"Now I suppose you'll get another whole column about Mr. Regan's statement about women and living in the Union of South Africa are allowed free and equal participation in their government.' What do you think?"

"I think," I told him icily, "you have just earned the Ebeneezer Scrooge Award for Charity in Giving. But your idea isn't totally without merit. I don't need diamonds for Christmas. Bearer bonds and negotiable securities will be equally acceptable.

"But no one has addressed my question yet. How can anyone think women value diamonds for themselves over a decent life for someone else?"

"Come on, Ma," Skip interjected. "Why don't you leave poor Mr. Regan alone? It seems it was just a year ago you were giving him a hard time because he said women just wanted to hear news about the first lady's clothes because they didn't understand things like the arms race."

"That's right," Pat agreed. "As I recall you said he was right, because most women didn't understand the arms race, and most men didn't, either. You said nobody you knew could understand why, when both super powers had the ability to blow the other to smithereens many times over, it mattered who could blow the other to smithereens more times. Or to more smithereens, for that matter. Good word, smithereens."

"Did I really say 'smithereens'?" I asked. "Surely I must have said something far more intellectual."

"You said 'smithereens,' " Breida told me. "And you said lots of other things, too. I think you followed Maureen and me around with a notebook and diamonds. Come on, tell the truth. What are you going to write about this week?"

I looked at her for a minute, and I thought.

"I think," I said slowly, that I'll write a thank you note to Mr. Regan."

ANGLER'S CORNER

by Bill Smith

The fundamentals of fishing for Bluefish

This two part article will review the fundamentals of fishing for Bluefish—a favorite target for both shore fisherman and boaters. The first article will concentrate on the characteristics of the fish, tackle requirements, successful angling methods, and locations most productive for angling from boats.

Next week, successful surf fishing will be explored.

Bluefish are migratory fish which usually arrive in Massachusetts waters in June and are firmly fixed in local waters by mid-July. They continue to provide great sport for anglers through late October when they begin their fall migration. Bluefish have ferocious appetites and are aggressive feeders.

Often referred to as "choppers," as any angler who has caught one can attest to the appropriateness of this nickmane, Bluefish are built for speed and fight. They challenge anglers fighting on the surface, racing deep, and exploding with acrobatic jumps.

Although the world record is over 30 pounds, most fish caught off the Mass. coastline will average 8 to 12 pounds, but it is not unusual to catch jumbo fish of up to 20 pounds, particularly during their fall migration. Any fish over 20 pounds is considered to be a "bragging" trophy.

Most of the time, Bluefish are not difficult to locate and often are found in the same general areas where other game fish frequent. Since they eat constantly and rapidly, a characteristic oil slick from the residue of this feeding is often left on the water which has a distinctive odor to it. Personally, I believe that the slick smells like fresh cucumbers.

Another visual sign indicating the presence of Bluefish will be diving birds that are circling above a feeding school of fish. The birds will not be sitting on the surface of the water since more than one has been eaten during the Bluefish's feeding frenzy. Also look for bait jumping from the water as it is being driven by a Bluefish school.

Although at times it seems that Bluefish will eat just about anything, these fish can become quite selective. Without visual signs, boat fisherman will need to concentrate their efforts in areas known to hold fish.

Bluefish like strong currents where bait is being pushed by the tide and its survival is difficult.

Inlets of bays and rivers often hold large numbers of Bluefish, especially during outgoing tides. Offshore rips and shoals are also excellent spots to try. No one can say definitely when and where fish will be located. However, with experience, an angler can limit his searching efforts.

Fish finders have become indispensable in locating fish below the surface by taking the guess work out of the search. Fishermen will spend less time, effort and money searching for fish. These machines will help get your lure or bait to the correct depth. They will not insure success since knowledge of correct lures and presentation is still important.

With the availability of inexpensive fish finders, the cost of such electronic equipment is now within the reach of most anglers.

Bluefishing does not require any specialized tackle. However, anglers are warned to avoid cheap rods and reels which hard fighting Bluefish will quickly destroy. The most popular trolling outfit consists of a good quality 4/0 reel such as a Penn Senator or a Diawa Sealine capable of holding 30 to 50 pound monofilament matched to a medium heavy action 6 to 6 1/2 foot rod. The lightweight Penn Jigmaster and the Diawa Sealine 50H make for a nice match with lighter lines.

Deep trolling requires the use of more specialized tackle such as downriggers or wire lines. When using wire, the rod must be constructed with roller quides and/or carbide guides since stainless steel wire will cut through ordinary rod guides. Locally, 50 pound wire is preferred because it gets your lure deeper and faster.

A good compromise is offered by leadcore line which is coated line with a flexible lead center. Although it will not run as deep as wire, it is easier to handle and will not damage rod guides, and provides adequate depth for inshore fishing. The downriggers provide the best opportunities for deep trolling with lighter tackle.

There are a multitude of trolling and casting lures available on the market today. And at times, all will produce. Personally, I prefer to troll imitation squid, bucktail jigs, deep diving Rapalla and Rebel plugs. For surface action, I use brightly colored poppers, shallow swimming Bomber lures, and flashy spoons.

The key to selection is careful observation. Watch what the fish are feeding on and simulate this.

If all else fails, go bright to attract fish. The multi-rigged umbrella lure can also entice fish to strike, but switch over to a single plug once fish are located.

Generally, lures should be trolled at about five knots, but anglers will need to adjust for tide flow and wind speed. Trolling lures should be fished about three feet above subsurface fish. When trolling surface lures, try fishing lures about 10 feet in back of the boats wake and never troll directly over surface fish. Work the edge of the school.

Drifting baits from the boat can be deadly, especially when worked in a chum line. Chum with cut up pogies using a chum pot or better yet, a cut off foot from your wife's pantyhose. Most skippers do not employ chumming unless they are fishing tuna. This is a mistake.

Finally, a very effective method of catching Bluefish, which I accidently discovered as I awaited Coast Guard assistance aboard the "Sleepy Dog" awhile back, is vertical jigging. The boat is allowed to drift while the angler drops a heavy jig to the bottom, cranks up a few times on the reel, and jigs upward. This method is very similar to cod jigging, and as in that fishing, the steps are repeated until fish are found.

Coat of Arms

What's in a name?

By Frank Keady
Special to the Mariner

Even an unusual profession like a jumper or tumbler-type performer provided a surname. For the French name of Sautelle was derived from a nickname literally meaning a jumper or even perhaps a grasshopper.

There is undoubtedly some association with the tournament games for the knights in which jumping and horsemanship were standard events.

Although this is the generally accepted French meaning of the word, it has also been suggested that the name may have developed from "Psalterer" or "Sautreor", meaning a player on the psaltery, a stringed instrument similar to a harp which was very popular in ancient times.

Unquestionably of French origin, and still recognized as a well-known French name, the surname took a different form in England where it appeared somewhat later. There it was found as Salter, Saulter, Sauter and Sawter. The English derivation is from the Old English "Sealtere", meaning a maker or seller of salt.

William ie Sautreour was minstrel to the Lady Margaret, Queen of England in 1304. From the spelling of his name, he was probably from France.

Cohasset Mariner

vol. VIII, no. 44 | 383-6731/545-7060 | thursday, july 31, 1986 | 2 sections | 35 cents

All eyes are on 'Eastwick'

By Jane Lane
Mariner Staff

"Quiet, please. Thank you all for being so cooperative. We're having a great time in Eastwick."

A few chuckles echoed through the spellbound crowd that had huddled for two days in Cohasset Village. They stood there motionless, staring out onto South Main Street for two days. Sometimes as few as 25 bystanders watched the cameras being set up as crew members paced beyond the police barricades.

And other times, 200 gathered on the ancient sidewalks of Elm Street, watching the monotony of movie-making.

"Witches of Eastwick" has finally arrived in Cohasset. And the reaction of townspeople to the filmmaking is as diversified as their reaction to the John Updike novel.

As traffic was halted in downtown Cohasset Tuesday morning, one local driver had this to say about the arrival of Hollywood. "This is a .... mess! And you can quote me," she bellowed from the vehicle which was stopped at the intersection of South Main at the town parking lot.

Officer Richard Yokum was the policeman in charge of stopping all cars at the location. That was where cars from South Main and Brook Street were prevented from entering the Village area. Cars were either detoured or directed back by the officer standing determined and lonely in the middle of the road.

"I've been here all day," the officer said, waving traffic through to the parking lot. "I started at 6 a.m. and I'm not sure what time I'll get through. It could be as late as 8 tonight."

The local officer said there were six Cohasset patrolmen assigned to the detail Tuesday. "We were told to be here all week, but I guess their schedule changes all the time. It depends on the weather," he noted.

(See page 5)

". . . when the crew arrived in Cohasset, they couldn't believe how well kept the town was. They said it looked too perfect. No one will believe a town really looks like this, they'll think it's a movie set."

A panormaic view of the movie crew as it sets up a shot in the second floor of the Red Balloon on South Main Street.

The best of Hollywood is working on 'Witches'

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

Charles Harrington helped turn his hometown into a land of illusion this week.

"I grew up in Cohasset," explained the assistant location manager for Warner Bros. "My wife and I just took a trip around the world; we just got back and I still think Cohasset is the prettiest town in the world."

He added, "I think people from Cohasset, if they're at a far away place, will be able to say 'I'm from Cohasset and that's where the film Witches of Eastwick was made and everyone will know how beautiful it is by the film."

Unless they know their stuff however, most movie-goers will know the pretty town only as "Eastwick," because the wizards at Warner Bros. worked last week to erase all traces of Cohasset.

"The production designer and the director just wanted to make it look more like a sleepy New England town," Harrington said.

The transformation included the replacement of signs on buildings downtown and the covering of parking lines on South Main Street.

"It's because they wanted to make it look more rural," he explained. "Eastwick is just a small town somewhere in New England and that's what it'll be played up as."

Harrington described the reactions of local business owners to Warner Bros. project.

"We're working closely with the chamber of commerce," he said. "We went around and spoke to most of the merchants and discussed the impact that the movie would have on them.

"I think it will have a positive impact on any merchant in the downtown area because of the increased foot-traffic.

"Everyone was excited about the movie coming," he said. "It's a good, positive thing. Everyone wants to meet Jack Nicholson."

People may get that chance. Harrington said about 80 percent of the exterior shots for the film will be shot in Cohasset.

"Jack is in most of the scenes downtown."

Warner Bros. moved into the village Monday, after completing segments at Milton Academy and at Otis Avenue last week.

A number of Cohasset extras took part in the Milton scenes.

Harrington explained, "We just used the facade of a building at Milton Academy, which is supposed to be Lenox Elementary School. It's all editing; they won't know if it's on Sohier Street or where it is.

"It'll be Eastwick."

The creation of Eastwick from Cohasset and other spliced strands from around the state might seem strange to residents of the town in the final

Extras told: 'Hurry up and wait'

By Nancy Garrison
Special to Mariner

The gracefully-columned Greek Revival facade of the Saltonstall Gymnasium was undergoing a subtle transformation early last Tuesday morning as three hundred extras - three dozen Cohasset residents among them - reported for work on the set of "The Witches of Eastwick."

The pedimental Milton Academy crest was being replaced with a Gothic "L", and a cupola surmounted by a weathervane was being hoisted into place directly above it. Thus it became the Lenox Elementary School of Eastwick - the first of many transformations we would see during the next three days.

Those who received the call from the Casting Company of Boston late last week were told that they would work for three days, were advised what clothes to wear, (sober colors!) and were given a stern caveat: YOU WILL GET WET! No one turned down the challenge.

Upon checking in at 7 am., we discovered a reality of show business: "Hurry up and wait." Presently Assistant Directors, (A. Ds. to us show folks) arrived with bull horns, and by ten o'clock they had organized us into groups of "faculty", "parents and grandparents", "students" and the previously selected rehearsed Band Members, ready to go onto the set. As the sequence to be filmed represented the Opening Day Ceremonies of Lenox Elementary School, chairs had been set out as an audience upon the lawn and driveway in front of the gym, with the American and Eastwick flags on either side. Band and faculty members' seats flanked a podium, facing the audience.

As that first day wore on, we extras - euphemistically addressed as "background artists" by the A.D. in charge - developed a deeper respect for the theatrical profession. The professionals, from director George Miller and actresses Cher, Michelle Pfieffer and Susan Sarandon downward through the production hierarchy displayed total cool and discipline as the sun rose higher and the temperature soared. Sun-screen and ice water were passed amongst us by crew members, but it was expected that all participants - amateur or pro, young or old - "listen up", keep quiet, stay in our assigned [illegible]ts and do precisely as we were directed.

On the set work goes straight on until two[illegible]rty or three at which time an hour's break occurs. On these ninety degree days ladies "who lunch" found the menu surprisingly substantial. Lasagne, hot dogs and baked beans, Salisbury steak with mashed potato and gravy and corn-on-the-cob were typical

Mooring transfer

Harbormaster Harry Ritter has ordered for a final time that the vessel Deborah Irene be removed from its harbor mooring.

In a letter to owner Bernard Salvador of 43 Elm Street, Ritter said the mooring has been assigned to Henry A. Pasqualucci.

Because the mooring has been transferred, Ritter said the Deborah Irene must be removed by July 16 or he will have it removed from the harbor.

The vessel was first ordered removed last year when it was discovered that the Deborah Irene was a boat owned by a corporation, not an individual. The harbor mooring regulations have since been changed, prohibiting a corporation to use a mooring owned by a private individual.

Special police request

Building inspector/zoning officer Donald Robbins requested that he be named a special police officer of the town. This is a customary practice by selectmen, he noted.

But in a written comment forwarded by Police Chief Joseph Kealey, he explained that the customary appointment of town officials and employees as special police officers is "in my opinion only a potential liability to the town of Cohasset."

The police chief continued, "These persons so appointed have no more police powers than any other citizen and although their appointment may be symbolic in some way it is also meaningless."

Selectmen have not acted on the request by Inspector Robbins.

Red Tide continues

The state Department of Environmental Quality Engineering (DEQE) has continued its ban on the harvesting of all shellfish in Cohasset.

The ban which began in late June, prohibits the harvesting of shellfish in Cohasset, Scituate, Marshfield, Duxbury and Plymouth. The paralytic shellfish poison has been found to be in excess of the state's standard.

Red Tide poisoning can be fatal if large amounts of contaminated shellfish are consumed.

Special permit request

Arthur Roberts, owner of Country Condominiums on Beechwood Street, is applying for a special permit to construct another residence at 39 Beechwood Street.

The hearing before the zoning board of appeals will be held July 31 at 8 p.m. at the town hall auditorium.

Roberts, a partner in Victorian Realty Trust, is seeking a special permit to construct an additional tri-plex on the property to the rear of the Country Condominium building.

Afterschool applications

The Cohasset School Department announced it is accepting applications for its new After School Child Care program.

The deadline for enrolling eligible students is August 1.

Superintendent Stephen Hart said the program will go into effect only if a minimum of 20 students are signed up.

Interested parents should call Supt. Hart at 383-6104.

Selectmen support regional animal shelter

Selectmen threw their support behind a plan by the Hingham animal control officer to construct a regional animal shelter.

Cohasset Animal Control Officer Richard Yokum will serve as this town's liason with the Hingham Animal Shelter Study Committee. That committee was appointed after receiving approval from the Hingham town meeting in April.

According to Hingham officer Paul Murphy, a state-of-the-art facility will cost about $200,000. The towns of Hingham, Hull, Cohasset, Scituate, Norwell and Hanover are expected to participate in the venture, he told selectmen Monday night.

Since Shishone Kennels closed three years ago, there is no single animal shelter for the six towns, he noted. Often, Murphy said, he will board stray animals in the garage at his home.

The Hingham committee will work for six months and prepare a report for the Hingham selectmen by the first of January. The proposal will then be presented to the town at the April, 1987 town meeting, he said. At this time, Murphy noted, the shelter is planned for a Hingham location since that town initiated the concept. However, if a more desirable location was suggested within another town, the committee would review that suggestion.

Town officials in Hull, Scituate, Hanover and Norwell have already issued their support of the regional facility.

The shelter would be used to temporarily house stray dogs and cats or dogs found in violation of the town's animal control ordinances. It would be an emergency shelter for abandoned animals and would serve as a central adoption service for those animals. A rabies clinic would be held at the shelter once a year, which would also provide euthansia services, disposal services for dead animals, and spaying and neutering services. Local animal control officers would be able to attend a series of educational programs operated from the shelter.

One possible location, Murphy said, may be the federally-owned property off Route 3A in the ammunition depot. But a restriction on that land states it must be used for educational purposes. Since the property would include educational classes for the animal control officers, there is still a possibility the property could be utilized as the regional shelter.

The shelter proposed by Murphy would be a state-of-the art, air conditioned, ventiliated, self-contained facility with no outside runs. Forth-eight dogs could be housed at the shelter at one time, along with 40 cats. The shelter would be open around the clock for the animal control officers, and from 3 to 5p.m. for the public. It would be staffed by Officer Murphy and perhaps student interns from area colleges specializing in veterinarian studies. The Hingham committee has already received a state grant for the educational programs the shelter will provide for the local animal control officers.

Murphy requested that Cohasset send a liason to the Hingham study committee. Currently the group is investigating the cost of a shelter. "We are looking for input from all the towns," he told selectmen.

Cohasset's animal control officer Richard Yokum, said he fully endorsed the proposal and accepted appointment as Cohasset's liason to the study committee.

Town meeting in April will have the final decision whether the Route 3A end of Tupelo Road will be closed to all traffic.

Sixty-eight homeowners in that residential neighborhood signed a petition requesting the end of that street which exits onto Route 3A be barricaded and closed to all incoming and outgoing traffic.

After reviewing the request, selectmen told Tupelo Road resident Archie Rasmussen that town meeting must approve the proposal before it is completed.

Rasmussen told selectmen Monday night that neighbors decided to help defray the costs of barricading the Route 3A entrance and would maintain whatever barrier was erected. At a previous discussion, selectmen suggested a barrier might contain trees and shrubs rather than asphalt.

In a letter dated July 23, Fire Chief Daniel Brock said he objected to the Route 3A closing, saying it would eliminate one of only three entrances into the residential neighborhood. If Pond Street and Pleasant Street were blocked off in an emergency situation, there would be no entrance into the neighborhood containing 75 homes, he said.

Police Chief Joseph Kealey had issued his support of the proposal.

Rasmussen told selectmen the elimination of access into the neighborhood was considered by the signers of the petition. "There are several other neighborhoods with less access," he told selectmen, including Fairoaks Lane, Surrey and Rustic Drives."

Describing an incident in which his wife and child were almost hit by a vehicle, Rasmussen said limited access would be a "small price to pay for the life of a child or anyone else in the area. It's not even a contest."

Rasmussen said he favored town meeting approval. "It would be wonderful to hear the town is in favor of safety," he said. "The consensus of the neighborhood is that we would pay part of the costs of planting trees to close the entrance and we would maintain it."

In the meantime, selectmen will request stepped-up speed enforcement along the neighborhood.

Art center fundraiser

Mrs. N. Frank Neer Jr. of Cohasset has been named chairman of the South Shore Art Center's capital campaign committee, organized to raise the funds for the Center's new facility.

Mrs. A. Werk Cook of Cohasset is the honorary chairman. Working with Mrs. Neer on the committee are Mrs. Edward F. Logan, chairman of the individual gifts and Mrs. Thomas B. Williams and Stan Nikkel, co-chairman of board gifts.

The capital campaign committee has begun its efforts to raise the $950,000 for its new facility to be located in Cohasset on Pleasant Street just around the corner from its present location at 103 Ripley Road.

To date the committee has raised $500,000 including a matching grant of $150,000 from the South Shore Playhouse Associates. The capital campaign committee will be calling on individuals and businesses on the South Shore to help in meetings its $950,000 goal.

The need for a new facility became apparent as the Center began to outgrow its present site. The new 8,000 square foot facility will house four large studio/classrooms with better teaching facilities, a central two-story gallery space with professional exhibit lighting, a gallery/members room for community functions, an expanded gift shop to provide a professional outlet for local artists

Home Center Realty

LENDERS TIGHTEN GUIDELINES FOR HOMEBUYERS

In some parts of the country, record numbers of homeowners are defaulting on their mortgages, and lenders are looking for ways to cut their losses on future loans. If you're applying for a loan, you can expect your lender to scrutinize the mortgage application more closely than they may have in the past.

Some lenders are asking for much more verification of customers' liquid assets. First, they want to be sure that you aren't borrowing any part of your down payment. Any large deposits into your checking or savings account may need some explanation of where they came from. If you got part of your funds from a relative, you might be required to have a gift letter stating that the money wasn't a loan. If you've sent in late payments on installment loans, you may have to write a letter offering reasons why you were delinquent. Therefore, the process of applying for a loan can involve more paper work and red tape than was the case in years past.

The professionals at Home Center Realty are knowledgeable about financing and can help you through the loan application process. If there's a move in your future, please call us at 749-8833 or stop by our offices at 57 Water St., Hingham.

Selectmen deadlocked on two meeting votes

Selectmen were deadlocked in a 2-2 tie twice during Monday night's meeting.

Those tie votes mean no action was regarding a request by a canteen driver for a transient vendor's license, and no action on a request to install a no parking sign at the upper end of King Street.

A request for a vendor's license was not acted upon after electmen split their vote. Selectmen Diane Sullivan and Rocco Laugelle were against the issuance of the license. Selectmen Cliff Mitman and James Gallagher approved the request.

During their discussion with the license applicant, selectmen said the canteen truck could never go into an area where a food store was located in town. They also warned him to stay away from the filming of "Witches of Eastwick." The vendor promised he would not sell his wares near the filming or local stores. He requested the license in order to bring his trucks to construction sites throughout town. Although there were not many sites, he told selectmen the contracts he made at the sites in Cohasset would help him build his business. He currently holds a vendor's license in Hull.

Selectman Mitman said if such restrictions were placed on the license, he did not oppose the issuance. Gallagher, who described the truck as "immaculate," said he would approve the license "if he stays away from the movie."

A motion to deny the license was made by Selectman Laugelle. But there was no action because of the 2-2 split vote.

In a related comment, Selectman Sullivan noted the furniture sales situated along the Rt. 3A roadside "is being looked into now."

In the other split vote, selectmen were undecided whether to install a no parking sign on the upper end of King Street near the Sunoco station exit. The request was made by resident Suzanne Moyer who said vans and trucks park near her property throughout the day. "I don't know if they're casing my house and waiting to see if someone is home," she complained.

Selectman Gallagher said the next time an unmarked car or van is parked off the street near her property, she should contact the police department.

Selectman Laugelle was opposed to the installation of a sign on the residential street. "I just can't see it. Everyone wants a sign wherever they want. Let's wait until this Stop & Shop (plan) is resolved. Then maybe that intersection will be changed," he said. "I don't want to continue to put no parking signs up all over town."

Police Chief Joseph Kealey endorsed the request, along with Highway Surveyor Harold Litchfield.

Gallagher said he has gone by the intersection frequently in the past few weeks and he has never seen cars parked there.

"I've never made a request of this type," Moyer said, noting she has moved to six different homes in town. "It is a heavily-traveled area with no space. I'm afraid they are casing my house. It's not the same van all the time."

Selectman Sullivan said, based on the recommendations of Kealey and Litchfield, she would vote to grant the sign request. Mitman agreed. Selectmen Laugelle and Gallagher opposed the request.

Does Wade Boggs live in Cohasset?

Selectmen are urging all greats, near-greats and former great baseball stars to join the Town of Cohasset softball game against the formidable Town of Scituate team.

Scituate selectman Jerry Dwight issued a challenge to the town of Cohasset. The game will be played in early August, according to Cohasset organizer Jack Worley, and the collective age of the team on the field must be 450 years at all times.

Recalling a similar challenge in 1980, Selectman James Gallagher joked that Rep. Mary Jeanette should have been disqualified because she played for both teams. (Her district includes both Cohasset and Scituate).

Selectman Diane Sullivan suggested any town employee, or committee member should quickly volunteer their services to the Cohasset team. "The Scituate team is already practicing. They're way ahead of us now so we better get this team in short order," she said.

Any person willing to lend their athletic abilities to the Cohasset squad should notify Jack Worley at the recreation office, 383-6791.

All proceeds from the game will be given to the Jimmy Fund. Each player must be sponsored by an individual, business or organization. Sponsorships cost $30 each, and tee-shirts bearing the name of the sponsor will be worn by the player.

Different strokes for those Hollywood folks. . .

Officer Yokum was responsible that day for detouring vehicles from South Main Street into the municipal parking lot, or halting all traffic while a downtown scene was being filmed.

Officer Yokum smiled infrequently Tuesday.

"Yeah, I guess I've taken a bit of abuse today," he said, signaling another frustrated commuter to stop. "But for $17 an hour, I can take it."

Each officer assigned to the Warner Brothers detail is paid $17 an hour for his services.

As he stopped a long line of cars from entering the Village, the officer commented. "Right this moment, this is a pain. They want to get through and it's my job to tell them they can't."

It was also perplexing to coordinate the two, two-way radios attached to either side of the officer's belt. One radio relayed directions from the movie crew. The second radio transmitted messages from the Cohasset police station.

"There's been a few irate motorists," Officer Yokum noted as one irate motorist abruptly stopped a few feet from his outstretched hand. "But most people have been understanding."

There are likely to be many humorous stories to come from this summertime experience in Cohasset.

Janet Hogan of Pratt Road shared one.

A nurse on the 11 p.m. to 7 a.m. shift at the Cohasset Knoll Nursing Home, Hogan headed home to Scituate early Tuesday morning. Being incurably bitten by the movie bug, Hogan traveled past the entourage of mobile homes and trailer trucks carrying the unseen movie stars and equipment.

She parked her car and walked over to where some of the crew members were feasting on breakfast. They talked to her without hesitation and asked her to join them.

'So I had some breakfast with them. And I was talking to one man, who's Cher's personal secretary or something. He asked if I wanted to meet her. So I did. I had some photos taken with her. She's a lovely woman, really down to earth," Hogan said excitedly.

Just then, that personal secretary (the real term is prat boy) told Hogan and her admiring crew of friends that Cher would be exiting her trailer in the town parking lot to film a scene in the Village. No sooner had he spoken than the raven-haired beauty walked briskly from the parking lot. Her black, shoulder-length hair was unkempt, and she was attired in a grey sweatsuit. With yellow sneakers and socks, she looked as though the character would be jogging in the upcoming scene.

As Cher walked past Hogan and her best friend, Ruth Renner of Scituate, everyone watched quietly but admiringly.

"I told you you'd see her," Hogan laughed, adding with just a hint of absurdity, "I know these things. I'm just one of the guys now."

Patty Gallagher, a waitress at the Red Lion, watched the excitement from the front steps of the South Main Street restaurant.

"Yesterday (Monday) we were bombed with customers," she said. "We've gotten a lot of the guys who are actually working on the film, too."

Gallagher said five men came into the restaurant Monday, and looking at the signs throughout the Village, inquired if this was the town of Eastwick. And if so, they were inexplicable lost.

"This whole thing has been pretty exciting," she said, watching the rehearsed scenes as cars drove past the film crews and cameras. Just then, she was interrupted.

"Isn't anyone here working? No one's going to take my check," one familiar customer joked to the two waitresses as they reluctantly left their perch at the front steps.

David Wadsworth, senior curator of the Cohasset Historical Society, has had a title transfer. He is now curator of the Eastwick Historical Society. That's what the sign says in front of the museum on Elm Street.

Wadsworth, a well-known native to the town, is an avid movie-watcher from his vantage point at the two Elm Street museums. There he has seen the action and talked to many of the bystanders and film crews who crowd the street each morning.

He had a previous conversation with a Warner Brothers cameraman. "He told me that when the crew arrived in Cohasset, they couldn't believe how well kept the town was. They said it looked too perfect. No one will believe a town really looks like this, they'll think it's a movie set. So in order to convince the movie-goer that the town is real, they had to take aerial shots of Cohasset, too. Then people will see it's not just a Hollywood set," Wadsworth stated.

The curator said the museums have experienced a significant spinoff from the filming. People who never entered the town, are now flocking to its stores, restaurants and historical sites.

"On a good afternoon, there may be 20 people at one time in the two museums," he said Monday. "But Sunday there was a steady stream of visitors, about 25 at a time in both museums. That's comparatively busy for us."

One couple visiting the museums last weekend told Wadsworth they had traveled "all the way from Hull." The curator returned the joke by noting,"Oh, that's where they're going to be filming Witches of Eastwick, Part II."

June Stonier, owner of the Red Balloon on South Main Street, anxiously awaited the arrival of the film crews Monday afternoon.

The Red Balloon had already been partially transformed into the Eastwick Word, the local newspaper office.

"It's really perked up the summer," she commented. "And business has been very good this weekend."

The owner of the children's toy and clothing store said business was unusually busy throughout the past weekend. "Many of the people were out-of-towners, faces we didn't know," she said. "And a lot of people had cameras."

Stonier said the construction crews who set up the staging in the store's front window and upstairs room were courteous and kind. "They're really a great bunch. They've been very nice to us," she said, grabbing something from under the counter. She smiled mischeivously as she displayed a magazine cover portrait of Jack Nicholson.

"They said he's been very accomodating," Stonier said excitedly. "So if he comes in here or I see him, I'm going to ask him to sign this photo. I really like him, and it would be great if I could get his autograph."

Filming is expected to continue for several days along Cohasset Village, the First Parish Church and the common. All the cameras crews request are cooperation and quiet.

Now if they can just prevent barking dogs from running loose along South Main Street. . .

Dress codes, discipline, are different in France

By Pam Schancupp
Mariner Staff

After spending a month with Jennifer O'Leary, 12, Diane Prudhomme, 13, of Souppes-sur-Loings, France, will say "au revoir" Thursday to her new friend.

Diane Prudhomme is going back home, but next summer the girls will see each other again. Jennifer O'Leary will spend next July chez Diane and Diane will return to Cohasset to spend August with the O'Leary family.

Diane Prudhomme is the granddaughter of Victor Prudhomme, mayor of Cohasset's sister city, Souppes-sur-Loing. Mayor Prudhomme and Rene Dine, chairman of the French town's cultural exchange committee, visited Cohasset for two weeks this summer to officially establish the bond between the two towns.

When Mayor Prudhomme and his wife Violette and Rene Dine and his wife France returned to France, Diane Prudhomme remained in Cohasset with the O'Learys. "Diane is the first one to participate in the exchange. We're looking forward to several more exchanges," said Marylou Lawrence, publicist for the cultural exchange committee.

Diane Prudhomme said, "I don't think there are a lot of differences (between living in the U.S. and living in France). There are some, but not much," she said.

Diane said life is "cooler" in the U.S. "Parents let the children do more things," she said. She explained that while Jen could decorate her bedroom as she pleased, her mother was more strict what when up on the walls and the ceiling.

French and American kids dress alike, but "it's more free here," said Diane. "French kids wear shorts, but they don't wear jams," said Diane. Diane said Jen has a pair of brightly colored jams with lots of flowers. Mrs. O'Leary is sewing a similar pair for Diane. "Diane picked out the material. They aren't as bright as some of the ones I have," said Jen.

Diane and Jen said they didn't have much trouble communicating with each other. Jen, who studied French for one year, said, "I didn't talk French to her at all. I was surprised that she knew so much English," Diane said. "Everyone in my grade knows as much as me." She has studied English for three years.

Jen said her father was interested in learning French and was excited about having Diane stay for one month. "He bought tons of dictionaries," said Jen.

They said French and American kids listen to the same music. "She knows all our singers," said Jen. "There aren't a lot of French singers that are really good, except for one or two," said Diane.

Jen said most days, she would get up and go to swim team practice while Diane slept in. Diane said, "I don't like swim team. It's too exhausting. I'm very lazy."

Jen and Diane spent the rest of the day together, accompanied by the O'Leary's dog BooBoo. They went sailing in the morning, went home for lunch and spent the afternoon swimming, playing tennis, playing on the O'Leary's trampoline, rowing or sailing.

They said they spent most of their time at the Cohasset Sailing club. "They're both pretty good sailors," said instructor Kurt Weisenfluh. Diane said before she came here she "knew how to sail, but very bad."

"She's got a good sense of humor. She speaks English pretty well, but we joke around with her sometimes and speak a little French," he said.

Diane Prudhomme, 13, and her Cohasset buddy, Jennifer O'Leary, 12, and her pooch, BooBoo, start out for a summer sail.
(Pam Schancupp)

Diane said she played her first game of baseball at the sailing club. "I prefer catch," she said.

"We're always busy," said Jen. They visited Faneuil Hall and the Museum of Science in Boston. They also celebrated the Fourth of July and Bastille day together.

For Bastille Day, Jen made Diane a red, white and blue cake and lit sparklers on top. "The dog finished it off," said Jen.

Diane said she likes eating large "American" breakfasts. At home I have coffee or tea for breakfast, that's it." She said at home she eats a larger meal at lunchtime.

Diane said she doesn't miss French food, except for a rabbit stew with wine prepared by her grandfather's cook. "It's really good," she said.

Diane said she misses her animals at home. She explained that Mayor Prudhomme is also a vet. "Because he is mayor, he can keep his animals at the zoo in Souppes. He has two ponies, fish, birds, and chickens."

Diane visited the U.S. briefly in 1979, when she returned to France from the Pacific, where her family was living. Diane was born in Melun, France, near Souppes, but at 16 months her family moved to the Hebrides. They later lived on Isle de la Reunion and New Caledonia before moving to Souppes.

A group of 12 adults are planning to visit France in the fall and stay with families in Souppes for one week.

"There is really no set exchange program. What we are trying to do is encourage people to be creative about how they would like to take advantage of our sister city relationship..

She said the committee has received a proposal for a house swap for a few months, and a proposal from a college student who would like to live in Souppes for a year.

"Even if a family can't take someone, that's OK. They can send their child there," said Lawrence.

The selectmen proclaimed Souppes-sur-Loing Cohasset's sister city in 1984, at the urging of Thomas Churchill of Cohasset, who, during WWII, led the U.S. Army's Eighth Tank Battalion in liberating the French city from German occupation.

"During the war, he became very good friends with two French women who were interpreters. Since then, he has maintained his friendships. He went back to visit them a few years ago and got the idea to make the two towns sister cities. He spoke to the mayor and he spoke to the selectmen, and they decided they would do it," said Marylou Lawrence, publicist for the cultural exchange committee.

analysis, but Harrington won't be bothered.

"It won't be weird for me," he said, "because I'm used to the land of illusion. Everything's an illusion in this business."

He added, The Witches of Eastwick is under the direction of some great masters of such illusion.

"I think the people of Cohasset will have a feeling of pride that everyone around the world will see their town shot by probably the best cinematographer in Hollywood, Vilmos Zsigmond."

Zsigmond shot Close Encounters of the Third Kind and The Deerhunter.

"I've worked on other films," Harrington said, "and the people on this film are really the best in their field. It's really exciting for me to work with the caliber of people that are involved in this."

He explained, "My first movie was *Jaws.*I was spending the summer on Martha's Vinyard and it was the same type of excitement we've found here."

Harrington said rubbing elbows with the likes of Jack Nicholson and Cher has faded in glamour through the long hours and hard work of film making.

"I think after you've met a really famous person, or a lot of famous people, you realize they're just normal people that have the same concerns as everyone else."

The characters and character of this film have been called into question by a number of affiliates along the spectrum of religion, but Harrington said he sees no problems.

"Everything's been very positive," he said. "Maybe the people in Cohasset don't consider it controversial. I certainly don't."

He explained, "Basically, the film is about relationships between men and women and that's the essence of the story. The witches and the devil and everybody are just vehicles to that end."

Harrington said, Warner Bros. will be shooting in Massachusetts until the end of August, and then will spend another six weeks shooting interiors at a Hollywood sound stage.

"We don't have a release date yet."

Hollywood mingles into the local scene as Cher (dark hair) walks past Cards 'n Shards on the way to a 'shoot.'

around town

☐ Must start this off on rather a sour note, but it is a story that bears telling. Buzz Stanton, who is handicapped and owns a special van for that purpose, had a sad experience recently. He had parked his van outside of the Red Lion Inn in the parking lot, and some person back into it (causing well over one thousand dollars worth of damage). That same person left without leaving his or her name, leaving Buzz to take care of the damages. It seems hard to believe that someone would cause so much damage (and disruption) to a handicapped person's only means of transportation and then just leave the scene . . .anyone who might have knowledge of this offense should get in touch with Buzz or the police!

☐ The Jenkins girls are in the news this week. Jessica and Rebecca are at the Plymouth River School in Hingham and both had good reports recently! Rebecca, who is going into the fourth grade this fall, is in the College Gate summer course, and won her prize on an original competition, which she wrote the score and lyrics for. It is played on the recorder. Rebecca was so excited when she made Pink-Blue in the kitchen, it really works!

☐ Congratulations are certainly in order for Andrew and Eileen O'Keefe, who celebrated 50 years of marriage on July 11. A nicer couple could not be found!

☐ A soon-to-be anniversay, also their 50th, will be celebrated by Mary and John Campbell. The milestone event will take place on August 1st, hearty congratulations to you both!

☐ Gary Ormiston, son of Peter and Joyce Conway, 101 Pond Street, has been awarded the Brink Fellowship from Lehigh University to pursue his Master of Science degree in Civil Engineering as a resident graduate student. Gary is a 1985 Cum Laude graduate of engineering from the University of Massachusetts at Amherst and is presently employed as a structural engineer at General Dynamics, Electric Boat Division, in Groton, Connecticut.

Gil Coyle of the South Shore Art Center gives instruction to Laura Roffo of Norwell and Kristin Nourse of Marshfield during a program at the Norwell Library. (Alan Chapman)

☐ July 14th was a big day for Arthur Lehr Sr. That was the day he celebrated his 90th birthday, and we all extend our best wishes to you, Mr. Lehr.

☐ Sure were a lot of "tourists" in our little downtown area over the weekend, all toting cameras and keeping a watchful eye out for celebrities . . . even Dinah Shore made comments about the "Witches of Eastwick" when she appeared here last weekend!

☐ State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray has announced that Design Awards are to be presented in November and December. The Arts and Humanities Council is sponsoring the Awards to "recognize and enourage excellence in the Commonwealth's architecture, urban design, landscape architecture and public improvements." The program is for all Mass residents with both public and private design projects eligible for awards. Anyone who wants to submit a nomination for a design project can contact Rep. Murray at 722-2400, or write to her at Room 134, State House, Boston, MA 02133.

☐ Ken and Pat Leisher are in town for a while, to sparkle up their home before they re-rent it. Bet they are counting the days until they can move into it again, which will be here before they know it! Here's hoping they have a few sunny days so that they are able to complete their work on schedule!

☐ Congratulations to Ann Courtney, who was named broker of the month with Gallery 360 for the month of May.

☐ Some Cohasset residents enjoyed a day in Boston recently, visiting Mary Jeanette Murray and showing the mayor and his entourage the city's historic points of interest. Janet Pyle served as an interpreter, and Mary Lou Lawrence and Kathy St. Onge were also members of the group.

☐ That's the news from here, keep yours coming!

Dr. Emmer opens Sohier Street practice

Dr. Susan Emmer, a chiropractor who lives in Cohasset, has opened her home practice Chiropractic and Family Wellness Care, on Sohier Street, just down from the Music Circus.

"Wellness" is a key word in the name of this new office since the primary focus is on what is right and healthy with the individual and enhancing what is right so that health might be restored throughout the whole person naturally. Basically this means preventive, whole health care in the largest sense, not only the relief of pain or symptoms.

While Dr. Emmer sees many adults in her practice, she feels the well-being of the entire family is paramount. She has found from her experience that children respond quickly and easily to chiropractic care, and believes that good helath habits, including spinal health, should be encouraged from an early age, just as preventive dental habits are encouraged.

"Just as we wouldn't wait until our teeth (which are a form of bone) fall out before seeking professional care, we shouldn't neglect the spine (also bone) which houses and protects the vital connection between brain and outer nerves," she states.

Chiropractors work with the spine because of its vital role in the functioning of the nervous system, the switchboard for the entire body. Gentle, non-painful techniques are used which are effective in removing nerve interference so that healing can proceed and optimum health be maintained. Since whole health is the focus, Dr. Emmer also works with nutrition counseling, stress management, exercise, and attitude, in addition to spinal adjustment.

Dr. Susan Emmer

Dr. Emmer has lived in areas on both the East and West Coasts, and was very careful in choosing a permanent home in which to live and practice. She really likes the feel of the South Shore: "Everyone I've met has been very friendly."

After receiving her Bachelor of Science degree from Montclair State College in New Jersey, Dr. Emmer pursued her graduate studies in nutrition at Columbia University. She received her doctorate from New York Chiropractic College, and continues to attend seminars and conferences throughout the country related to topics of wellness and health.

Dr. Emmer will begin teaching locally in the fall and welcomes people with any interest or questions related to wellness or chiropractic.

She can be reached at her office where she works with patients daily, day or evening at 87 Sohier St., Cohasset, 393-1330.

Behind the scenes

So far, most people are pretty pleased with the progress of "Witches."

The few shops which have been closed have contributed to the financial boom of others. The pretty stores along Elm Street and South Main, specializing in local, handmade items, are attracting a lot of attention and shoppers. People who came to Cohasset for a peek at Cher, also like to shop when the filming gets bogged down and boring.

Restaurants have profited by the arrival of Hollywood to our eastern shores. Out-of-towners, grasping at a chance to spot Nicholson, also like to eat when the superstar is out of sight.

Shopkeepers are ecstatic about the movie. Their businesses are thriving at a time when things can slow down. The dog days of summer, oppressively humid and uncomfortable, are not usually the most active days for commerce.

But there are people who are somewhat disgruntled with this movie-making. Count us in.

We were told by publicity people before Warner Brothers officials stepped into the state, that "local press would get priority?" Silly us, we forgot to ask priority of what?

The answer is - priority of the publicity embargo.

You see, the press can't bring you little tidbits of what's going on behind, above or around the scenes because we aren't allowed. We are given no information worth repeating, no special photo opportunities, and above all, no chance to meet the 'stars' of the film.

Not that we had visions of interviewing Nicholson or Cher, or anyone else. Woe to us for even thinking such a thought. "Interviews with the stars would intefere with the creativity of the actors preparing for this film," we were told by the official publicity person.

Not that a newspaper reporter ever had a creative moment, but pardon us for being so naive, so thoughtless.

This lock on all publicity related to the film does not end with the big name stars. Crew members have been told not to talk with any reporters. "I'm sorry, we can't say anything," one worker answered when asked how many people it took to hold back the gawking crowd. Not a difficult question, and certainly not a probing inquiry into the secret machinations of movie making.

Another man, who drives the mobile homes provided to the film's stars, noted politely he was not allowed to talk with anyone holding a pen and reporter's notebook. "That's what we've been told," he said apologetically.

If that's Hollywood, you can take your creativity and head back to the Pacific.

NEWS ITEM — South Shore real estate values continue unprecedented climb. With all it has to offer, business transferees look to South Shore towns. Commuter boats to Boston a factor. Average price of Hingham home up to $250,000. Cohasset breaks million dollar home price level twice in a year. No end to upward spiral? Some realtors think 'yes'

"...I don't want to hear again how you could have gotten another 300 grand for the old place if we just held on to it a little longer..."

Atkinson family didn't go out for first call

To the Editor:

I would like to correct an error in last week's Mariner. It listed among the names of the Cohasset residents who had been called by Warner Brothers' Casting Company for a second call . . . "Marian Atkinson and her daughter."

I would like to state that Marian Atkinson nor any of her daughters went out for a First Call.

It is my personal opinion, after reading John Updike's novel, that Little Compton, R.I.'s decision to refuse location for The Witches of Eastwick, had a bit more class than that of Cohasset.

Appreciation for Police, Fire Depts

To the Editor:

On the night of July 18 the Cohasset Fire and Police Departments responded to an emergency call to my home. I would like to express my deepest appreciation for their quick response and all their efforts to revive my late wife, Patricia Litchfield. All involved acted with great professionalism and compassion. Both departments are to be commended.

Many thanks from our entire family.

Patricia Litchfield family says thanks

To the Editor:

On behalf of the family of Patricia (Cissy) Litchfield, I would like to thank all the wonderful people in Cohasset for their love and support during this very sad time.

A very special thanks to Polly Litchfield and Pat and Peter Laugelle. My sister was very lucky to have had such warm, loving friends.

The entire family will be eternally grateful to you all.

A day in the life of a movie extra. . .

fare. The potato salad was very tasty though, and the ice tea could not have been improved upon.

After lunchtime, specialized shots were filmed, often with most of the extras not participating. During these waiting intervals we were expected to remain quietly in the "holding area" and await our call - and as the sun disappeared each night behind the Chapel, the climax of the day's activity approached: THE RAIN SCENE.

For those of sufficient vintage to recall the burning of Atlanta (on the MGM back lot) and the unforgettable overhead shot of moaning wounded as Scarlet picked her way amongst them in "Gone With the Wind" - or the heart-stirring acceleration of the mounted knights charging into action at the battle of Agincourt in Olivier's "Henry V", the scene which unfolded on the green lawn at Milton ranks with these cinematic highs.

For a younger generation steeped in the marvels of George Lukas and Steven Spielberg it was equally awesome as we watched the set being prepared for wind, rain and storm.

A gigantic crane was driven close by and jacked up off it s wheels, its long arm slowly arching more than a hundred feet aloft as it suspended a huge watering device resembling a farm irrigation machine directly above us. On all sides other watering machines were put up to send in wind-swept rain from the perimeter, and a wind machine resembling a huge window fan was wheeled into place. Multiple bags of dry autumn leaves were brought out by Special Effects men which would be scattered and blown and, most dramatic of all, the lightning simulators were hoisted into place on top of tall trailer trucks on either side of the action. From all sides and from some of the school windows high-velocity floodlights were ready to illuminate the set.

As these preparations were taking place the extras were recalled. Earlier in the day we had been rehearsed by the A. D. for what would happen next. As we went through our "acting" paces, running as Dorothy Parker wrote, "the gamut of emotions from A to B", we were directed to silently register first alertness, then boredom followed by mild surprise, consternation and finally pell-mell escape from the drenching rain and fierce lightning. We were organized "by the numbers" for our ultimate dash - some leaving earlier than others - heading in all directions as we supposedly fled to shelter indoors and in our cars. What will appear on screen as mayhem was actually painstakingly choreographed; an exciting finale to each day, taking place when the darkening sky overhead was just right, around nine o'clock.

And so the three days progressed, with little change in the ordering of our schedule. Sometimes one group of "background artists", perhaps the "faculty" or Band Members would be called out. Sometimes another group, perhaps the first three rows of "parents and grandparent" would be asked to report earlier on the following day. Our appearance on the set was always governed by the time of day and the light effects, as Director George Miller filmed the same scenes over and over again from constantly differing angles which eventually will be pieced skillfully together in the complex mosaic of editing.

We were told that this production crew is definitely First Team quality, which was no surprise as we watched them at work. Miller is tirelessly inventive as his detailed creation takes place before our eyes. To watch his camera crew at work is a lesson in precision. He is guided by his "story board", a billboard-size arrangement which looks like a giant comic strip with numbered sketches, each one minutely defining a particular camera shot.

But unfortunately we were not always on the set, which, however hot it might be was eminently preferable to the confined humidity and boredom of the "holding area" situated upstairs in an under-ventilated gym of uncertain age.

It was interesting to watch as three hundred normally active persons of all ages adjusted to inactivity and the first exciting flush of adrenalin subsided. A spirit of camaraderie developed. New friendships were formed and ships passed in the night. Who knows - perhaps romance blossomed in the sultry atmosphere, (but we personally did not observe this.) A variety of pastimes evolved: there were the Bridge Players, the Discussion Groups, the

'Witches' extra Nancy Garrison and her fellow background artists Lisa Schramm and Billy Jordan. (John Magadieu)

Readers - (paperbacks of all sorts and "the Globe" were favored, but the N.Y. Times Book Review, assorted Nancy Drew thrillers, "Gourmet" and "Spiderman" were also noted.) We watched with particular interest as a pair of ten-years-olds reasoned their way through a game of chess on a particularly natty little travel-board with the sang froid of Russian champions.

Then there were the Sleepers, blase souls who stretched out on a row of folding chairs and immobilized themselves for forty winks oblivious to the confusion about them. These relaxed individuals were often seasoned troupers, members of Actors Equity, the professional players union who by law must be used in all theatrical productions in this area. It is for them that the hot dinner we initially thought so odd was served as is specified in their contract. It makes great sense. A substantial meal on the set, whatever the weather, is a highly desirable perk.

As we talked with some of these professionals fascinating stories unfolded. We listened one steamy afternoon to a father, an entertainer in burlesque, whose children are professional performers too. His son, who has been dancing since he was three years old is now, at the age of ten, an experienced choreographer with assignments from all over New England and New York. The little sister, now seven, and also a dancer from the age of three, is his partner, performing difficult feats of adaggio ballroom dancing in dinner theatres. This family traveled a considerable distance to the "Eastwick" set each day, and the father was pleased that such a prestigious film would be listed in their resumes. The children themselves are great kids - disarmingly unaffected and well-behaved; an obviously loving and close-knit group.

At lunchtime and occasionally during the day discipline was relaxed a bit, and extras were allowed outdoors to loll about under the trees, walk the track (for the inexhaustible athletes among us) and sometimes watch the distant action on the set. But even during these interludes we were constantly exhorted by the bullhorns: "Quiet - ALL QUIET"......"Rolling - WE'RE ROLLING!!" and conversation ceased.

On the set of course we never took an eye off the three stars whenever they were there. During rehearsal times for the "background artists" stand-ins of similar height and coloring were used to represent Cher, Michelle and Susan as cameras set up final angles before the last call was made. When at last they appeared it was with such a quiet and low-key manner that if you'd not been looking, you would have missed the switch. All three actresses are slight women of medium height, with beautifully erect posture and the enviable deportment of ballet dancers.

Cher is most exotic, with an exuberant Afro hairstyle, gathered in slightly at the nape of her neck. She wears lovely flat sandals laced above the ankle, and what seems to be a diamond-shaped lacy tattoo just at the ankle bone in front. Her clothes are soberly colored and ethnic South West.

Michelle looks like an ethereal version of a Cohasset young mother, dressed in faded blue cotton skirt, sleeveless blouse and sneakers. Her hairstyle is pure Botticelli and her look fragile.

Susan has arrestingly expressive eyes behind rimmed spectacles (in this scene) with consummate grace and understated humor in her body language while conducting the young band members in their music. Her hair is confined in a strict French braid and black ribbon bow, and her dress is a restrained grey and white striped pinafore.

The success of these scenes involving children depends upon the rapport between actresses (one taking the part of a music teacher; the others as mothers of school children) and the juveniles playing opposite them. Obviously all have done their homework. The little ones portraying Michelle's and

"...the participation of townspeople in it has been debated endlessly in the press, on the beach, at dinner parties, on local television and at the Log & Line."

Cher's story-children are thoroughly delighted with their "mothers." Members of the band are seriously responsive to Susan. We understand that this has involved considerable preparation and fun together. The results are engaging. No "Hollywood temperament" in evidence here.

Although extras were requested not to approach the principal actors for autographs, predictably human nature surfaced during the last hours on the final day of shooting. The director and stars were patient and good-humored, particularly with the many children on the set when a small line of pens and torn slips of paper appeared during a break in the action.

The propriety of filming this movie in and around Cohasset, and the participation of townspeople in it have been debated endlessly in the press, on the beach, at dinner parties, on local television and at the Log & Line.

Members of the clergy, book reviewers, private citizens and even bona fide witches have spoken out for and against the project. This is everyone's right, and a source of real discussion of a common interest amongst us.

As this week of actual involvement by a large number of us in the movie ends, one fact surfaces: IT WAS FUN! It was a cooperative undertaking which included all age groups working together and enjoying it. Not a whiff of objectionable material was suggested in the sequence filmed in Milton - (although some might find it reverse propaganda to listen to the singing of "America the Beautiful" a hundred or more times.) Patience and discipline were required of the participating extras, a beneficial experience for all. We learned grace under humidity, and we learned that movie-making is indeed fantasy, not reality, as emphasized by Ed Atkinson in one of his early letters.

There is no question that John Updike's novel is controversial. How we wish that his considerable literary talents of imagery, character delineation and mood could be directed onward and upward. Maybe next year. So much for the book. As for the movie-makers we found a group of dedicated technicians who are masters of their craft. Director and Production Crew seemed to appreciate the cooperation of Cohasset folks and to be sensitive to our concerns. So far so good.

This week all the signs in the village are changed and it's "ROLLING.....Action on Main Street." George Miller, the soft-spoken Aussie in charge of the proceedings is easy to pick out at a distance....he's wearing a planter's hat, down-to-earth sandals and the most vivid Aloha shirt this side of Maui. He's a nice guy. We think he'll make Cohasset look as pretty as you've seen it.

Dramatics Personae appearing in the Milton Academy sequence included: Carol Dean, Sally Atkinson, Joanne Fichtner, Carla Getto, Christine Collins, Agnes McCann, Harriet Partridge, Robin and Patrick Suhrbier, Billy Jordan, John Geary, Mark Mercurio, Sarah, Kate and Caroline DeLima, Michael Equi, Rebecca and Sarah Kirk, the Minnar family, Amy Crafts, Jennifer Reidy, Billy Murphy, Kathleen O'Brian, Colby Lawrence, Lisa Schra nm, Marcie Hahn, Jennifer Anstead, Ben and Ju na Chittick, the Lindgren familiy, Kate Barret nd Scituate resident Faith Bowker, a first grade te her in the Cohasset schools, (who was cast, incidentally, as a "parent" rather than "faculty".)

For all those Cohasset folks who will appear in up-coming sequences, as we say in show business, "BREAK A LEG!" and have fun.

St. Stephen's lists the month's activities

QUESTIONNAIRE HELPS IN PLANNING — A good response to the adult education questionnaires has helped the committee in its planning for the year ahead. A session on faith and the work place is planned for October-November. Advent will see a course on today's family. Faith and the arts will be explored in February with a preaching series during Lent on the lives of the saints.

Sunday morning classes will take place from 9 to 9:50 a.m. The preferred evening was Tuesday with the time 8 to 9:30 p.m. One-third of the respondents were interested in a parish retreat and in a year-long Bible study group. The committee thanks all who helped in their planning.

NEW ORGANIST SELECTED — Stephen J. Lee was chosen by the Rector to be the next organist and choir director at St. Stephen's. He achieved his Master of Music degree from Eastman School of Music in 1977. Currently studying with James Christie, organist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Lee was a finalist and won honorable mention at the 1982 and 1985 Belgian International Organ Competition. Christie describes him as a "fine player and quite good with a choir." In addition to organ Stephen Lee enjoys skiing, reading, composing and all arts and travel.

CARILLON RECITALS DRAW MORE LISTENERS — Attendance has doubled to an average of a hundred people listening to the carillon recitals this year. The new time of 6 p.m. seems to agree with picnickers who bring their supper to the common. Clapping and horn-honking can be heard in appreciation of the fine music which issues from our bells. Upcoming carillonneurs include Carlo van Ulft from Venlo, The Netherlands, this Sunday, followed by Michel Goddefroy from Tourcoing, France.

RICK HUNTER SAYS GOOD-BYE—The following are excerpts from Rick Hunter's address to the parish at his farewell reception on June 29: "Part of the pain I feel in leaving is because we deal with a powerful phenomenon: the phenomenon of Music. When shared, it can heal, bond, change and express that which otherwise could never be expressed. It breeds love and connection because it is fundamentally divine, and we carry it always within ourselves.

The other part of my pain is the largest part of my joy—you—all of you. You have loved me even when I felt unlovable; you supported me, even when I felt inadequate; you accepted me, even when I felt unworthy, and you gave me strength and courage when I felt most vulnerable and afraid. You have been role models, mentors and friends. You allowed me to grow. But most of all, you have given me a good life.

How can I ever thank you for such gifts, such blessings, as these? Perhaps by holding up to you the mirror of music—the music we have made and shared together. And because we have shared it, there is an eternal love and bond between us—one which can never be broken. I will also try to thank you by the way in which I live the rest of my life; by endeavoring to bring honor to you and the love you have given me."

The full text of Rick's good-bye is available from the church office.

HULL EPISCOPAL CONGREGATION NEWS—Since Easter the Hull Episcopal Congregation has been meeting for Sunday morning worship at 8a.m. at the Lighthouse Assembly of God, 767 Nantasket Ave. Services have been discontinued for July and August to be resumed there in September. They are still looking for a site where they can hold the Sunday service later in the morning at a more convenient time for members. The congregation presently consists of about 30 members of all ages. Judy Hardy, a gifted musician from Hingham, is the organist.

Plans for the fall include a Sunday school for pre-schoolers (older children attend the church service), an inquirers' class and/or a Bible Study class. A psychologist and a divinity school student from St. John's, Hingham, have offered to lead a group for Hull women on Christian coping skills.

In addition to the financial support provided by St. Stephen's and St. John's, the parishes of District 10 have voted to support the congregation as a joint project. Diocesan grants have also been received from the Parish Development Committee and the Episcopal Churchwomen.

Hull Missioner Diane Edson asks for our prayers and any ideas we may have for sharing in their worship, Christian education, service or fellowship activities.

Wellspring, the Hull interfaith thrift shop and fellowship center, 754 Nantasket Ave., of which the Rev. Diane Edson is Director, continues to grow and change. The shop is open Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, from 10-1. Donations of clothing, household goods, toys, and jewelry are appreciated, as well as volunteer staff. There has been an average of 10 shoppers per day with an increasing number of people coming in for the friendliness of the shop as a "drop-in center". Children are welcome. There is a toy corner for todlers to play. There is also a small office where Diane is available for counseling or private conversations during shop hours. Plans are being considered to make the food pantry a distribution site for the Boston Food Bank and government surplus food.

A board composed of Hull community leaders has been formed to oversee the activities and goals of Wellspring. Income from the shop usually covers the rent, but new local funds are needed to pick up the cost of operations.

Senior Center Hours: Monday through Fridays 8:30 to 3:30p.m.
Closed: Sept. 1st, Labor Day

From the Director: "Normal aging process may cause forgetfulness"

Before a diagnosis of Alzheimer's disease is made, other illnesses which may cause memory loss must be excluded. The condition must be differentiated from the mind and occasional forgetfulness that sometimes occurs during normal aging. Depression, which is fairly common in elderly individuals facing a variety of stressful situations, may also effect memory.

Approximately one-half of elderly women and men with severe intellectual impairment are victims of Alzheimer's disease. About a fourth of the overall group suffer from vascular disorders, especially multiple strokes, and the balance have a variety of other conditions, brain tumors, abnormal thyroid function, infections, pernicious anemia, adverse drug reactions, and abnormalities in the spinal system are some examples of conditions that could effect a person. The specific diagnosis is very important as some causes of mental decline other than Alzheimer's disease can be readily treated.

Each person suspected of having Alzheimer's disease should have a thorough physical, neurological and psychiatric evaluations. Computerized tomography (CT scan's) electroencephalography and occasionally special studies of the spinal fluid system are often required for accurate diagnosis. Comprehensive blood studies, including tests for detecting several metabolic disorders, must be carried out as part of the evaluation.

After other diseases have been ruled out, a diagnosis of Alzheimer's disease can usually be made on the basis of medical history, mental status and the course of the illness. The CT's may show a general slowing of the brain waves and may help confirm the presence of Alzheimer's disease. Periodic neurological exams and psychological testing are useful in evaluating the progress of the disease.

You can receive more information by contacting the Executive Office of Elder Affairs Alzheimer's hotline: 1-800-574-9334 or make a telephone call to your local support group to secure new resource for help at the Alzheimer's Disease Support group of the South Shore, Inc. at the Hersey House, 229 North Street, Hingham, ask for Jo Ann Mitchell 749-0582. Coalition awaits Weymouth response on solid waste

By Don Merrill
Mariner Staff

A committee of the South Shore Coalition studying solutions to regional solid-waste disposal has a plan of action in the study, but awaits a response from its biggest member — Weymouth — on its willingness to join in the effort.

The subcommittee met last week and adopted a plan presented by solid-waste experts from the state and Metropolitan Area Planning Council (MAPC). The plan includes consideration of different disposal methods, at what point to seek consultants and a future management plan.

The work plan "begins to address issues like regional recycling, transportation and elimination of yard and organic wastes from the stream," said Judith C. Wiegand, MAPC environmental planner.

But trash volume has a bearing on the types of disposal methods that would best suit a South Shore town.

The alternatives include a large landfill, trash-to-energy plant, mass incineration and other methods that generate re-usable materials from trash.

To gain answers and indications of whether coalition towns were interested in the study, the subcommittee in April mailed a questionnaire to appropriate local officials.

No response has been received from Weymouth and a few other towns. While answers are needed from all members, coalition Executive Director Jean C. Christensen of Marshfield says the subcommittee is especially interested in word from Weymouth.

"Everyone wants to know whether Weymouth is with us or not," she said.

The town generates nearly 75 tons of trash per day, making it the largest partner in any regional solid-waste venture.

Christensen confirmed that a form and information package had been mailed to Board of Public Works Vice Chairman Gerard J. Cullivan.

Weymouth public-works Director Frank S. Lagrotteria said he had not seen a copy of the questionnaire, but did express interest in a study of regional waste solutions.

"The best long-range solution to disposal problems is on a regional basis," he said.

The study subcommittee, Wiegand and Betsy Loring, a coordinator with the state Solid Waste Bureau, have warned that towns must join the study at an early stage or be left out of a future solution. The complexity and cost of regional disposal make that necessary, they say.

Wiegand said the work plan involves an information campaign to make residents and officials aware of the increasing urgency of the problem.

Towns using municipal landfills have a maximum of 13 years; others, who rely on commercial haulers and landfills, may find it harder to obtain contracts soon because of dwindling landfill space, Loring said.

Regional disposal could be on line in 10 years "if the towns work very diligently," she said. Some communities may thus be forced to adopt intermediate disposal methods, such as landfill expansions.

To counter dwindling space, Loring said most towns "are doing what they can to decrease bulk," such as eliminating yard waste and doing as much recycling as possible.

State to restore railroad crossings

By Don Merrill
Mariner Staff

A project to improve railroad crossings in several South Shore towns is unrelated to the study of possible restoration of commuter rail, officials say.

Local crews in Weymouth, Hingham and Abington have been observed working at sites where the Greenbush and Middleboro branches of the Old Colony Railroad cross local streets.

But officials of the MBTA connected with the restoration study said the work is part of a project to improve grade crossings funded by state and federal governments.

To reduce local maintenance of the railbeds, in fact, Weymouth has been authorized by the state to remove rails along the Greenbush line. The rails at two crossings on Commerical Street had been removed by late last week.

Three sections of the tracks in Weymouth had already been removed, according to Terry N. Fancher, chairman of the citizens' advisory committee studying restoration issues.

Weymouth public-works Superintendent Frank S. Lagrotteria said the authorization came to reduce the amount of maintenance his department had performed along the railbed.

MBTA spokesman Peter Dimond said the crossing-improvement program "involves no construction activity" in connection with commuter-rail restoration.

New, rubberized rail crossings are being installed "primarily to improve the roads for autos," he said.

While there are no rails along large sections of the Greenbush line, freight is occasionally hauled along the Middleboro line through Braintree, Weymouth, Abington and towns to the south.

Dimond said the improvement project also includes re-signalization work on that line.

Fancher said the work, completed about six weeks ago in Hingham, caused something of a stir among residents.

The citizens' commitee is scheduled to meet Thursday, Aug. 7 in Braintree Town Hall. They are considering which areas of the three Old Colony rail lines will need further scrutiny before restoration can take place. Final "scoping" determinations will be made at the group's September meeting.

Unemployment office opens in Plymouth

By Bob Briggs
Special to the Mariner

The newest state unemployment service agency, located below the Registry of Motor Vehicles at 40 Industrial Park Road, is actually four offices in one.

The DES has three departments at the office: unemployment, or job insurance, employment and the Employment and Training program. A fourth service, South Coastal Workers 55-Plus, a senior citizen job placement group, can also be found at the DES office.

The DES moved into the new office from its old Court Street location on June 1, 1986. One of 37 statewide offices, Alex Gilchrist, job insurance manager, likes the new Plymouth office. "It is a nice, clean professional office and it is good to have all the services in one place," said Gilchrist.

The job insurance department is there to provide unemployment benefits for people from Quincy to the Cape Cod Canal. They usually process about 1,000 a week. The department will provide help for people who have filed a claim stating that they lost their job "through no fault of their own."

If the claim is accepted, that person is eligible to receive half of their previous weekly wage up to a maximum of $207 a week plus $6 dollars per child for up to 30 weeks. This service is there to help people get along while they are between jobs.

Conveniently located within the same office, after stopping at the unemployment department, a person can go over to the employment department. This department deals directly with the employers and matches job openings with people. In fact, each year over 90,000 people find jobs through DES. Over 24,000 employers use the DES to find employees.

The key to the employment department is the computer bank that holds all the job listings. There are two ways to take advantage of this service. Anyone can walk in during office hours and use one of the four microfiche viewers to go through the job listings on their own. Or a person can fill out a form and be interviewed by one of the staff.

After the interview, the results are typed into the computer. The computer then compares your specifications with the available jobs. A printout with the most compatible matches is the end product. This service is also free.

The employment department also offers employment seminars and counseling to help with all phases of the job search process. All sorts of people take advantage of these services. "A large number of college students come in," according to interviewer Marjorie Verre. "They come in during their last break before graduation and start the process."

The DES occasionally take their services on the road. These "positive recruitments," or satellites, are trailers set up at places where a mass hiring is taking place. "If an employer doesn't have a building yet, we can give him a desk right here in the office to conduct interviews," said interviewer Aldas Ridgley. The office will go to great lengths to connect people with the right job.

The Plymouth office placed 5,000 people into jobs last year for no charge. These services are not unique to Massachusetts, but the Employment Training Program is. The Employment Training Program helps people currently on welfare or general relief find jobs.

Since there has been a relaxing of mandatory rules regarding employment and welfare recipients, many people "voluntarily want to be removed from the list," said Parris Ferry, a staff member.

"We find jobs," continued Ferry, "to give respectability to people." These people do not want to be on welfare any more and want jobs. In the past the program found jobs anywhere. But lately, due to past success, the service is placing people in places where there is a chance to earn good money and achieve advancement. "We don't get people dead end jobs anymore," said Ferry. They have placed people into all kinds of jobs, even $300 a week office positions.

The program has been successful, especially the Southeast Region offices. The Plymouth office placed approximately 200 people last year, 175 percent of their goal. According to Ferry, this is "incredible for the size of the office."

Employment Training uses some incentives. They will pay a person 10 dollars a day to go to their job interviews. If someone gets a job with 20 or more hours a week, the program will give them a $100 bonus to cover anything they need for the job.

"But," as Ferry says, "these are highly motivated people with skills to put to use. They make our job easy. They would try for jobs even without the incentives."

These three departments are all options that people can choose, depending upon where they stand employment wise. The fourth service at the Plymouth office offers similar aid to the elderly. South Coastal Workers 55-Plus is not affiliated with the DES, but it has a similar task: finding jobs for people who want to work.

With funding from the Private Industrial Council, the United Way, the federal government and other groups, the service helps people who want to rejoin the work force. SCW also helps people who have never been in the job market before.

The 55-Plus program began two years ago in the Newton area and has been in the Plymouth office for six weeks. Ann Quinlan is the employment specialist in Plymouth. She thinks the elderly have a lot to offer. Said Quinlan, "They have a lot of experience and work well with younger workers."

Many of the people she helps are victims of the old mandatory retirement laws. Now they want to get back into the work force.

Bildner & Son site plan to be determined this week

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

The Planning Board will decide Wednesday whether or not to approve a site plan for J. Bildner & Sons grocery store at Cushing Plaza.

The site plan review, which the board instituted after finding Bildner's in violation of its occupancy permit last November for using a produce cooler which is larger than town bylaws allows entered its last round July 23 as the board closed its hearing on the plan.

Peter and Elizabeth Minnar of 4 Pine Ridge Road, Bildner's nearest residential neighbors, fired a volley of complaints as representatives of Windward Management which is Bildner's parent company, tried to convince the board to approve their plan.

Much of the argumentation centered on whether town bylaws uphold the market's use of an access road behind its building, through a 20-foot variance.

Attorney Charles Humphreys, representing Windward Management said when zoning was adopted and a boundry line bisected the original parcel in 1955, a use permitted one portion of the lot could be extended 50 feet into the other portion.

Humphreys claimed the lot was held in single ownership in 1947, before zonig was adopted, and therefore "the use permitted in the business district of the lot may be extended 50 feet" into the residential lot behind the store.

"If the access road was in existence prior to 1955," he added, "then its use could be continued." Humphreys noted the road has been there, and in use for rubbish removal and deliveries since 1962. But Windward Management is still investigating the origin of the road.

Peter Minnar argued the bylaw was designed to give "proper usage" and not designed to increase the lot size to allow commercial usage on portions of the Pine Ridge Road lots which abutt Cushing Plaza.

He explained, if the Pine Ridge Road lots were to be sold in the future as residential lots, commercial usage on those lots would have to stop.

"This fact shows the purpose of the bylaw and the limitations with regard to Bildner's intent," Minnar added.

He told the board, Cape Elizabeth Realty Trust, which owns both the residential lots on Pine Ridge Road and the Cushing Plaza parcel, has offered to sell him the Pine Ridge Road lots.

However, Chairman Christine Bassett said because no one was at the hearing representing Cape Elizabeth Realty Trust, that action could not be confirmed and would have no bearing on the decision.

The Minnars continued to complain about the appearance of dumpsters at the site, calling for improved screening of the property. And they pushed for a fence around condensers, which they said is a noise problem.

Windward's engineer Ronald Erickson told the board such a fence would hinder truck access.

He showed the board before-and-after photographs of the area. "A great deal has already been done to eliminate an eyesore," he said.

Sandy Tierney, senior vice-president of Windward Management added, "Our feeling is, there is a natural buffer already there; there couldn't be a more appropriate buffer between the store and your house."

Elizabeth Minnar replied, "Have you been there?"

She said the lots had been ripped up by perk tests and very little screening remains.

"You talk about being a good neighbor," she added; "we've helped to keep it a clean property."

She explained, the property had been a popular gathering spot for partying youths and a hot spot for vandalism, until she and her husband had the police crack down on it.

Peter Minnar said of the buffer, "When the leaves fall off the trees this fall, it's going to be an eyesore."

He suggested Bildner's plant some pine trees.

Tierney told the board, "Landscaping the buffer woud not be money well-spent."

Humphrey added, dumpsters and screening problems are a separate issue. He urged the board to "stick to our reason for being here," the results of the addition.

Tierney indicatd, if the planning board rules that trucks must access and exit another way than along the present access road, J. Bildner & Sons "would have to evaluate the cost of doing that versus the continued use of the addition."

They concluded, squabbling about trash removal hours.

"They came to pick up the trash at quarter of seven this morning," Minnar said. "And they've been there as early as 6:15 a.m."

"We've called the contractor every time that's happened," Tierney responded. "We have no problems with limiting our dumpster hours."

"There have been no results," Minnar shot back.

He suggested the Planning Board impose restrictions on when contractors can come to pick up trash.

Bassett said, "You knew when you bought this house you were next to commercial property. The Planning Board can't satisfy all your concerns."

She added, "But there are some things, such as access and contractors hours that we can deal with."

In other business, the Planning Board voted t accept a revised landscaping plan for Bergson's o Rte. 3A . Landscaper Dana Shaw, representin Bergson's told the board he plans to remove si plants from the original plan, add 22 new plant and relocate others.

Politicus — by David A. Mittell, Jr.

Massachusetts Lottery: Time for another look

For years in the forties, fifties, and sixties there was a biennial candidate and colorful character (the like of which our political culture has long produced) named Sweepstakes Kelly, or Kelley. Kelly was elected lt. governor for one term, but mostly he ran bravely, amusingly, and forlornly on a single issue: the legalization in Massachusetts of a sweepstakes or lottery.

Long ridiculed, Kelly lived long enough to see mainstream politicians come around to his way of thinking. In 1971 a lottery bill was defeated by a hair in the legislature, and when a couple of spineless liberal Democrats in the state senate succumbed to big-time lobbying and switched their voters, it was passed and signed into law by Gov. Francis Sargent.

Kelly's thinking, like that of all legal lottery advocates, was as follows: People are going to gamble anyway---if not legally, then illegally, which means under the auspices of organized crime. Why, then, not legalize gambling, tax the winnings, and use the proceeds to benefit society as opposed to financing the further economic development of the underworld?

That's logical, and most people would argue that in the 14 years the state lottery has been running a lottery it has pretty much worked out that way. The Massachusetts Lottery, run without known scandal by the state treasurer's office, has doled out quite a bit of money to the cities and towns, and the illegal daily numbers game is said to have suffered as the popularity of the various forms of the state game (borrowing from Harvard and Yale they call it "The Game") has grown.

But it seems to me that another look is in order---and on several scores. The first is that on revenue-raising grounds there is no justification whatever for a state lottery. The Lottery accounts for about 2% of revenues in a state that is simply awash in black ink. The Lottery's profits are distributed to our communities with a great deal of fanfare, the mental message of which is that without "The Game" our financially constricted communities would be so much the poorer. That's rot. The state has enough cash on hand without The Lottery to help the cities and towns as it pleases. In short, there needs to be some other social return to justify The Lottery---the revenue argument doesn't wash.

The second score on which The Lottery needs to be reexamined concerns gambling the vice. The Massachusetts Lottery came to pass in an era when a liberal majority was reluctant to call anything whatever a vice with the exception of soldiering. We were told that with the likes of Lyndon Johnson in the White House our sins such as fornication, blowing dope, and gambling were, in John Lennon's phrase, "just a silly giggle."

When The Lottery passed the argument ran that while society was acquiescing in the reality of gambling, it was not in any way promoting it. That argument, too, turned out to be rot, for the Massachusetts Lottery annually spends millions marketing itself. The result is that hundreds of thousands of people who never played the illegal numbers now gamble on a regular basis. Were The Lottery merely society's way of controlling gambling and keeping it out of the hands of the Mob, there would be no cause whatever to advertise. In reality, what advertising has done is to greatly expand the overall amount of gambling among our people.

A great question that must be answered in finally evaluating The Lottery is: who plays? What segment of society invests in the legal lottery with its extraordinarily poor rate of return? The answer is that while there are plenty of middle class people who safely throw away a dollar or two a week to Megabucks, there are two unfortunate groups that are especially drawn to the lottery: addicted gamblers and the poor.

We may assume that addicted gamblers will gamble legally or illegally, and the questions they raise with respect to the legal lottery is philosophical rather than pragmatic: should or should not the state be a party to a destructive addiction?

But with regard to the poor, the argument is quite pragmatic, for The Lottery should be understood as a highly regressive form of taxation---in other words taxation that falls more heavily on the poor than on any other segment of society. Oddly, political progressives, who nourish themselves with calls to increase the taxation of the rich, seem to take no offense at the spectacle of state government fattening coffers with moneys disproportionately derived from those near or below the poverty level.

If The Lottery is unneeded as a revenue-raiser, if it encourages people to throw their wages away in gambling, and if its taxing effect falls disproportionately on the poor, there is only one possible justification for its continued existence: keeping betting out of the hands of organized crime. Initially it appears to have had that effect. The Mob's daily numbers game,—which was based on horseracing and your neighborhood bookie, and the winning number of which the late Boston Evening American published every day—is said to have suffered with the onset of a legal daily number.

But law enforcement sources tell me that with the overall increase in gambling brought about by the legal lottery's slick, effective advertising, illegal gambling has recovered nicely, and continues, as before, to enrich the parasitic, homicidal scum who inhabit the underworld.

If my sources are correct about that, the legal lottery ought be to abolished, there's no doubt about it. At this juncture what we ought to do is to examine the record and determine exactly what effect legal gambling has had on illegal gambling, and proceed accordingly---continuing an unpromoted legal lottery only if it can clearly be shown that it curtails illegal gambling on a permanent basis.

Unfortunately, no such examination of the record will come to pass unless and until there is a scandal in the Massachusetts Lottery such as the scandals that have taken place in the Connecticut, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania lotteries. No examination of the effect of The Lottery will take place because proponents of legal gambling have been extremely skillful in acquiring reputable and powerful allies.

Probably the proponents' most skillful historic move was the legalization of church beanos, which took place about half a dozen years before the legalization of the lottery itself. The legislation of beanos assured that the single, most influential moral force in the Commonwealth, the Catholic Church, could probably not effectively oppose a state-run lottery. For the Church to try to do so once parochial beanos were taking place every week would have created a popular upheaval in the Church; for, if powerful state lottery interests ever (i.e. then or now) found themselves under attack by the Church, surely they would respond by threatening to abolish beanos.

Once the legal lottery set up shop in 1972 its management continued to build alliances with consummate skill. As noted above, the dispersal of its profits to cities and towns is done with fanfare. Mega-winners, too, are proudly displayed, as if we all some day will win a million or two. Who among us has not dreamt of the boat, the trip around the world, or the telling of the boss to take a flying hike? Who among us dwells on the fact that for the great majority, money spent on The Lottery is money thrown away?

By The Lottery's skillful planning (the correct term is "cooptation") our contemporary "bookies" are reputable merchants and community leaders---the owners of drug, liquor, and variety stores who sell the tickets. They, too, are well-advertised when they peddle a winning ticket; and The Lottery would count on them to form an instant pro-Lottery lobby should the whole business ever get called into question.

The "cooptation" goes on and on. The most influential of proper-Boston law firms would defend the lottery if it ever got into trouble or came under political attack. The Lottery has, in short, built alliances that permeate society, and it is obviously entrenched---probably so strong that it could survive a scandal.

But while widespread popular support, the acquiescense of churches, the interested involvement of merchants and politicians, and the garnish of proper-Boston lawfirms can give The Lottery respectability and make it politically powerful, they cannot make it right. The day will come when we will have to take another look.

A Stone's Throw — by Paul Steven Stone

"Is an honest face holding back your career?"

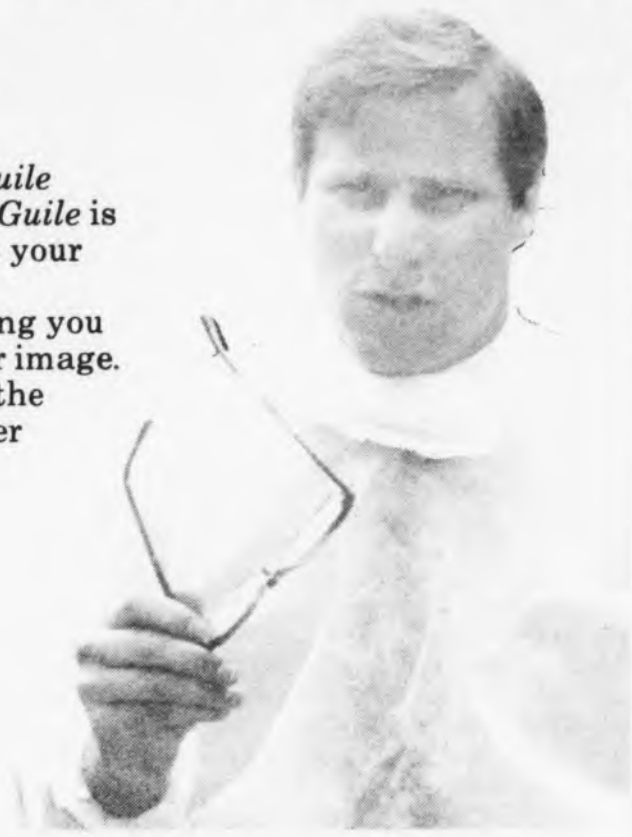
Announcing a major breakthrough for survival in the corporate jungle: new Guile camouflage cream. Developed by a mid-level executive in a family run business, Guile is guaranteed to cover-up those annoying involuntary facial gestures that reveal to your superiors how incompetent you think they are.

If raised eyebrows, bulging forehead veins and clenched muscle jaws are turning you into the skunk at the corporate party, new Guile can dramatically sweeten up your image.

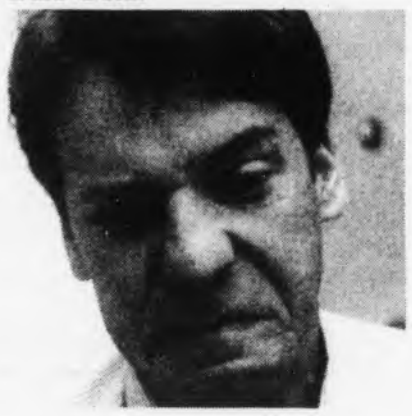
Yes, now you can become a solid team player. Just one application of Guile in the morning gives your face a simpering enthusiastic glow that lasts all day, no matter how much silly nonsense you suffer through. Choose from a variety of strategic facial attitudes: the "Wimp," the "Yesm Master," the "Brown Noser," the "Faithful Retainer" and many others.

So whether your boss is a psychopath, an Ivy League classmate of the company president, or a civil service bureaucrat whose main interest in life centers around organizational charts, new Guile camouflage cream will put a fresh look on your face — and in your career — almost immediately.

Note: minority users should allow an extra 10-12 weeks to see signs of improvement in their career status.



BEFORE



AFTER

After one week of the Guile "Put On A Successful Face" program, you too can see a dramatic change in your facial attitude towards incompetent and insensitive superiors.

DARE Family Services needs parents for Adam

Adam is a bright, friendly, verbal and affectionate four-year-old white male. He appears to be a victim of early abandonment and persistent neglect. Adam is a very fearful, needy and overweight child. He needs a safe and well-supervised long-term home with positive role models.

Adam can be quite aggressive towards adults and other children. His defiance, tantrums and egocentric view of the world are more in line with the behavior of a two-year-old. At times, Adam will punch, hit, kick and scream to get his own way or demand attention. All of this is the behavior of a very sad, angry and unhappy little boy.

There are many past behavioral patterns to undo. He will benefit most in a family without other children. It is clear the Adam needs to be the focal point of any family. Adam is still a baby in so many ways. He is not ready to share a parent's love and attention. At some point, Adam will learn to share, take turns, and play with other children. He will also require the consistency and attention of one parent at home on a full-time basis. Adam's high energy, aggressiveness, demands and lack of social skills will present many challenges to any new family.

Adam has made some positive gains in a temporary foster home. He loves to eat, but cannot continue to feast on sweets and candy. Adam's introduction to well-balanced meals and a sensible diet have enab'ed him to lose some weight. Also, Adam has overcome a fear of toilets and baths. Now, he is on the road to being toilet-trained and there is an improvement in Adam's personal hygiene.

Adam responds well to one to one attention. He is an energetic and active child with a rich fantasy life. Adam has a good attention span for short periods of time. However, it is difficult for Adam to sit still. He loves to play with his busses and enjoys the game "cops and robbers."

What's in a name — Reichert

By Frank Keady
Special to the Mariner

Names have their own special magic often disguising a story that began centuries ago.

Although few new surnames are created in this age, you might compare the present day preferences in naming a child with those methods which evolved in the Middle Ages.

It is quite common to give a child the name of an elder member of the family — one who is revered — with the hope that the infant will somehow follow in his footsteps.

It was not too different in the 11th and 12th centuries when a grown man might be given some identification which best described his qualities or the character trait to which he aspired.

In these formative years of name-calling, a man could have been named after his residence, his occupation, some unusual characteristic or, as in the case of Reichert, given the name of his father.

Ancient Germanic personal names were derived from dithematic combinations by which two words were joined to form a name. This was quite common among Aryan races with the exception of the Romans. Reichert is composed of two words, "reich" and "hardt," literally translated as "rule-hard."

Reichert is also spelled Reichart, Richart and Richardt in Germany and was extremely popular. The Normans were responsible for introducing the name into England where it became Richard, the name of several kings, saints and bishops. In the Netherlands it is spelled Riihard. . .the Scots use the form Ritchie while in Italy and Spain it became Riccardo.

Titled noblemen who bore the name were found through Europe's kingdoms, they having received grants of lands and wealth for their service in the many battles for power between Emperor and Church.

If you would like a history of your family name and a facsimile of your COAT of ARMS, please send $3, plus self-addressed envelope to: IS THIS YOU? P.O. Box 807, Westwood, MA 02090.

Arrangements can be made for full color reproduction.

Area Women's Center needs new volunteers

The South Shore Women's Center is beginning its annual recruitment drive for new volunteers. The Women's Center depends heavily on its volunteers to provide much needed services to battered women.

The Women's Center provides a wide range of services to victims of domestic violence. Volunteers staff a 24 hour hotline. Staff provides crisis intervention, emergency shelter, long and short-term counseling, and legal advocacy. An anger control group for men is also sponsored by the Center.

The Center is also looking for Safe-Home Providers. These are people who are willing to open their homes to women and children who have to flee from a dangerous situation. The length of stay for these women is from one to five days, and the locations of the Safe-Homes are kept strictly confidential. The Safe-Home Provider is on call for one week per month.

The Center is looking for homes in which Portuguese is spoken, and homes which can accomodate special needs or handicapped people.

There are also new volunteer opportunities available this fall. The Center is looking for people who would be available one or more days per week to train as Court Advocates. This is an excellent opportunity for someone interested in a career in Criminal Justice.

The South Shore Women's Center welcomes students over 18 and elders as volunteers. Call Joan Stiles at 746-2664 for more information.

FROM THE KITCHEN

Culinary greetings from North River residents

To know the joys of the North River is to know Barbara and Dick Pearson whose summer cottage at Damon's Point is a stopping-off point for boaters who tie up for a visit with the genial couple, or give a wave as they pass by on their way out to sea.

Both are excellent cooks and over the years have shared many a tasty recipe with our readers. A trip to the post office for Barbara to mail this latest batch involved getting out their dinghy and a walk from the dock to their car for the two-mile drive to the village, so we all join in thanking the Pearsons for a chance to make this

ONION SHORTCAKE

2 large Spanish onions, sliced
3 T oleo or butter
Shortcake batter (below)
1 egg, slightly beaten
3/4 to 1 c. cream or evap. milk
Saute onions in butter till clear. Add salt and let cool. Prepare shortcake batter and spread in greased two-quart baking dish. Top with onions. Mix egg and cream and pour over onions. Bake at 425 for 25 min. Serves six.

SHORTCAKE BATTER

1 c. Bisquick
1/3 c. milk
1 slightly beaten egg
Combine ingredients. Mix well.

Instead of Europe, Europe and more Europe, many people are going places and doing things that seem a little odd, just to get away from it all. Some are spending their summer vacation in winter resorts, such as Florida, the Bahamas or Sugar Bush, VT.

Some who have never spent a day in any woodsier spot than Central Park are on African safaris, traipsing the jungles in search of gorillas or rhinos. Alaska is booked solid, said to be the "in" place this summer, rather than tempting fate by risking a hijacking on a flight to Greece or Paris. Even summer traffic on the Cape or long, hot delays on the highway can steal precious time from one's vacation and makes home seem pretty good.

According to the U.S. Travel Bureau, lots of people are opting to stay at home, taking day trips to the mountains, beaches and lakes.

Here on the South Shore, our fishermen are content to hitch up their trailer and take their boat out for a day's fishing now that the bluefish are in season. Barbara writes: "One of Dick's customers gave him this recipe for bluefish and although I hate bluefish, I found it really delicious cooked this way on our grill.

CAPE COD BROILED BLUEFISH

2 lb. bluefish filets
2 T lemon juice
1/2 c. grated Parmesan cheese
1 1/4 c. soft oleo or butter
2 T mayonnaise
3 T chopped onion
Dash of Tabasco
Place fish in single layer in well greased baking dish. Brush with lemon juice. Let stand 20 min. Combine other ingredients. Broil fish four inches from heat for 6 to 8 min., till flakes. Remove from heat and spread cheese mixture. Broil 2 to 3 min. more till brown. NOTE: Can be done in foil on grill. To brown — open foil last few minutes. (Great!)

Cars that sport skiis on their roofs and head north each winter, are now adorned with kayaks and canoes, making tracks for our lakes and beaches. Kites that can cost up to $50 add a gala touch to the beach scene and in backyards, that old-fashioned game of horseshoes is cause for cheering to the sounds of the clink of a "ringer." Here's Barbara's recipe for a dish to go with barbecued hamburgers and frankfurts:

POPPYSEED PASTA SALAD

1 lb. macaroni twists, cooked and drained
1/4 c. each chopped onion, celery and green pepper
1 8-oz. bottle Italian dressing
1/4 c. sweet pickle juice
1 T poppyseed
Mix ingredients together in large bowl. Cover and refrigerate overnight. Keeps well for several days and tastes better if allowed to marinate for eight hours or more.

Pilgrim nuclear update: Boston Edison plan proceeds

Boston Edison Company announced last week it is proceeding with additional safety-related modifications to the containment at Pilgrim Nuclear Power Station in Plymouth.

The company will also complete other scheduled modifications associated with the refueling outage including fire protection improvements

Whie this action will keep the plant shut down until early 1987, the company believes it is appropriate and prudent to provide this further assurance that safety-related issues are fully addressed before the plant returns to service.

Generic concerns over the capability of the nation's 24 Mark I containment systems to withstand the effects of a severe accident have been expressed recently by government and are being addressed by industry.

Additional features to improve confidence in the performance of Mark I containments are being reviewed by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission and an industry group which includes Boston Edison. The company will proceed with a Pilgrim Station-specific evaluation to identify and implement beneficial improvements to its Mark I containment during this outage.

Meanwhile the state legislature's Energy Committee will conduct a public hearing on legislation to expand the state's definition of power plant emergency evacuation zones from a ten-mile to a forty-mile radius.

The Committee will accept both written and verbal testimony on the proposal at a hearing scheduled at the State House, Room 222, Monday, June 28, beginning at 1 p.m.

The bill was authored by State Sen. William B. Golden (D-Norfolk-Plymouth) and has been cosponsored by State Sen. Nicholas Costello, State Rep. Lawrence Alexander, as well as by Sen. Salvatore R. Albano, Senate Chairman of the Committee on Public Safety.

"This legislation embodies the understanding that the potential danger of an unexpected radioactive release does not obey a ten-mile boundary," said Costello. "In my own district, I know that Haverhill, Methuen and North Andover, which barely lie ten miles outside of the Seabrook plant, should be prepared in the event of an emergency."

Alexander added, "We know from Three Mile Island and Chernobyl that thousands of people from beyond a 10-mile radius would evacuate if there were a serious accident. If there were no plans for evacuatin routes, adequate medical facilities and reception centers for evacuees, there would certainly be mass confusion and panic that would also threaten public safety."

In a letter to Costello and Alexander, Sen Golden said, "The accidents which have occurred at Three Mile Island and Chernobyl have dramatically emphasized the need for emergency plans which go far beyond the ten-mile NRC requirement. Other states have recognized the need for expanding the emergency planning zone. It would appear evident from recent events that public safety now requires us, in Massachusetts, to reconsider the ten-mile zone."

According to Alexander, a Congressional study has concluded that a serious meltdown at the Pilgrim nuclear power plant could kill 3000 people up to 20 miles from Pilgrim and could cause injuries as far as 65 miles downwind from the plant.

Liability limits

In a letter to the Plymouth Board of Selectmen, U.S. Representative Gerry E. Studds (D-MA) pledged to strongly support legislation to "require that nuclear power plants assume full liability for damage resulting from a nuclear accident."

Congressman Studds made the commitment in response to a Resolution adopted by the Plymouth Selectmen on July 8, urging the Massachusetts Congressional delegation to support legislation of this type.

Rep. Studds immediately began implementing his commitment by submitting testimony to the House Subcommittee on Energy Conservation and Power, calling for the elimination of the present $665 million limit on nuclear power plant liability under the Price-Anderson Act.

"I do not believe it makes sense to continue limiting the liability of nuclear plant operators. A series of studies have validated what common sense at any rate makes clear, namely that a major nuclear power plant accident could result in an economic loss to nearby communities of billions of dollars in medical costs, lost income, and property damage."

"In the event of a major catastrophe," continued Studds, "Congress under current law has promised to thoroughly review the particular incident and take whatever action is deemed necessary and appropriate to protect the public. What this means is that much of the cost of a major disaster will be borne either by the taxpayer or by the victim, while the liability of the power plant operator will be limited to a fixed, and inadequate amount. This system is not logical, and it is not just."

Boston Edison has received accreditation for four of its nuclear training programs from the National Nuclear Accrediting Board. The board is an arm of the Institute for Nuclear Power Operations, an organization formed by the nuclear utility industry in late 1979 to set standards for nuclear plant operations beyond minimal regulatory requirements.

The four programs are: non-licensed nuclear plant operators, licensed reactor operators, senior reactor operators and health physics technicians. There are currently 39 licensed operators. 79 health physics technicians and 37 non-licensed plant operators enrolled in these accredited programs.

To receive accreditation, Boston Edison went through a comprehensive process that began with the establishment of a system to manage the training procedure. Plant jobs were analyzed and a self evaluation performed on their training programs, which are based on NRC regulations. Sixty-one U.S. nuclear utilities made the commitment to file self-evaluation reports for their programs by the end of 1986. The group included utilities that were either operating or had at least loaded fuel before the end of 1984.

Boston Edison completed that task at the end of 1985. Forty-one of the operating plants have at least one program accredited.

A team of training experts from INPO and utilities made an on-site evaluation to confirm that the programs are meeting or exceeding industry standards. In the final step, the utility's training managers presented their programs formally before the National Nuclear Accrediting Board, which is made up of senior level representatives from nuclear utilities, industrial training specialists, post-secondary educators and the NRC.

Following accreditation, programs will be continually refined and upgraded. The company will be required to file a status report every two years and go through a complete review of its programs every four years.

According to Duncan Sanford, Boston Edison's Nuclear Training Manager, "Receiving accreditation means that the National Nuclear Accrediting Board is fully confident that Boston Edison's training programs meet the INPO standards of excellence."

The National Nuclear Accrediting Board is expected to evaluate these remaining programs at Chiltonville Training Center late this fall: shift technical advisor, chemistry technician, instrumentation and control technician, maintenance electrician, maintenance mechanic, technical staff and managers.

With the accreditation of these programs, Pilgrim Station will join the three operating nuclear plants who are now full members of the National Academy.

An historic bygone era in Nickerson's 'Tintypes'

THEATRE REVIEW

By Judith Montminy
Mariner Correspondent

"Tintypes," the current offering at Norwell's Nickerson Theatre (through August 30), fits right into this summer's renewed interest in the Statue of Liberty and the immigrant experience.

The musical, conceived by Mary Kyte, Mel Marvin and Gary Pearle, ties together a series of vignettes and 50 songs from the period 1891 to 1920. "Meet Me In St. Louis," "I'll Take You Home Again, Kathleen," "You're A Grand Old Flag," and "We Shall Not Be Moved" are featured in "Tintypes."

The talented cast members (Robin Allison, Jeff Bannon, Jeff Lyons, Karen Murphy and Merle Perkins) portray famous personalities such as Thomas Edison, Emma Goldman and Teddy Roosevelt, as well as nameless immigrants who try to enjoy life in the land of opportunity.

Veterans of local productions of "Forbidden Broadway" and "Rap Master Ronnie," the cast shifts characters with ease and precision.

Jeff Lyons is particularly touching in the opening scene as the European Jew who touches American soil for the first time. Some of his gestures are reminiscent of Harpo Marx; he accurately captures the tempo of the "shtick" comic in the vaudeville scene.

The entire cast works as an ensemble and takes turns shining in different numbers.

Since "Tintypes" is primarily a series of songs loosely strung together, it is a tribute to the cast and to the director Niels Miller's staging that the evening is a pleasant one — both visually and musically. Donald Soule's set is attractive and functional as it houses the on-stage orchestra in a turn-of-the-century gazebo.

As usual, the Nickerson Theatre provides comfortable surroundings on a hot summer night.

But don't expect "Tintypes" to give any searing commentary on Teddy Roosevelt's foreign policy or on the rights of shopgirls or black southern workers. A brief scene with Emma Goldman points to the socialist stirrings earlier this century, but "Tintypes" doesn't pretend to promote a point of view.

It is a lightweight show — a nostalgic look at a segment of American musical history.

"Tintypes" plays Tuesday through Thursday at 8 p.m.; Friday at 8:30 p.m.; Saturday at 2 and 8:30 p.m, and Sunday at 2 and 7 p.m. The Nickerson Theatre is located at 30 Accord Park Drive in Norwell, 871-2400.

A conversation with Bob Hale & his love of reading

By Peggy Beals
FROM THE BOOKSHELF

"I hope you enjoy your reading!" said Robert Hale, proprietor of Westwinds Bookshop in Duxbury. He spoke at the first meeting of the Historic Winslow House coffee series in Marshfield.

"Too many people think of reading as something they have to do," he continued. "They no longer sense the joy of reading."

Introduced by the association's president, Bob English, Hale communicated his enthusiasm as he discussed a stack of books he's chosen for pleasurable summer reading. He has a book store, he says, "because it is the only way I can afford to see all the books I want. I order them and hope others will buy them."

A resident of Pembroke, Hale ran a bookstore in Wellesley for some years and worked with books in New York before coming to Duxbury. He is president of the Give the Gift of Literacy Foundation, active in national bookselling circles and a popular speaker.

He made all but one of his pile of books sound irresistible. When The Diabolical Dictionary of Modern English by R.W. Jackson arrived, he and his assistant Mark Provost "were irritated when customers interrupted us," it was such fun to read. It contains such definitions as "computer: an electric machine able to produce the bungled calculations of humans, faster."

Hale has worked with literally hundreds of writers, "a boon and a burden. I sometimes like the person, but not what he writes." Not so of Brooke Astor. "She is tiny, piquant, sharp and very funny and her book is, too." The Last Blossom on the Plum Tree is a slim novel of a rich woman who has no intention of leaving a cent to anyone.

"There's more substance in another fine funny novel, John Mortimer's Paradise Postponed. The author of the Rumpole of the Old Bailey series and others creates "characters you will remember, Dickensian, similar to Anthony Trollope," said Hale.

Hale overcame his repugnance for the title Cold Sassy Tree, read Olive Burns' delightful love story and raves about it. He asked Burns why she had a 12-year-old narrate her story. She said she wanted to avoid the near-obligatory graphic love scenes found in almost every book today. Her young Will "could imagine a lot but not know anything." Burns is writing a second book.

The Two Mrs. Granvilles by Dominic Dunne is based on a famous murder. One of the real Mrs. Granvilles later lived in Duxbury, where some who knew her say she was exactly as depicted in this book, but others assert she was nothing like!

The thick Prince of Tides by Pat Conroy, Book-of-the-Month Club selection and "THE book!" at the bookseller convention hasn't impressed Hale in more than 500 pages. Conroy spoke at the event, between Walter Cronkite and Carol Burnett, who was expected to wow the audience.

He read several pages of the novel, won a standing ovation and so impressed Burnett that she muttered a sentence or two and sat down. Hale finds he doesn't care for the characters or what happens to them.

He enjoys comparing books on the same subject. He liked Iacocca for the author's blatant Americanism, and his admirable attitude toward his parents, then compared his account of Henry Ford with that in Robert Lacey's Ford, somewhat different. "Lacey is a snob!" he said. The book was "fascinating."

Jean Harris' Stranger in Two Worlds is curious, showing such a change in the author after her trial and imprisonment. Hale recommends A World of Villages by Bruce Schwartz, an objective and absorbing account of his stay among African villagers. He also endorses Sue Hubbell's essays, A Country Year, and Dr. Seuss' book for adults, You're Only Old Once, "to be given to your children when they're 70."

Seuss offers a very funny look at medical clinics with their ancient National Geographics and endless tests.

He closed his talk with two poems from David McCord's recently published One at a Time.

Hale's recommendations and his infectious joy at the pleasure to be found in reading may be sampled regularly at his fall and spring Third Thursday author series, and at talks sponsored by the Plymouth Community Nurses Association, both in Duxbury. For details, ask at the Westwinds Shop in Snug Harbor (Washington Street), Duxbury.

The Dragon's Dungeon — By Claire McDonough

Let's hear it for the hip generation

"Are you actually eating a brownie?" the Dragon asked. "I haven't seen you eat a brownie in years. What happened to your diet?"

I ignored his question and posed three of my own. "Are you still planning on writing to Prince Charles before he comes to Boston this September? Are you still going to try to convince him to bring Di and the kiddies? Do you still want to have a cookout for them in our back yard?"

"Yes, yes, and yes," he replied. "Is that a popsicle you're eating? And do you still think it's a dumb idea for me to want to entertain royalty?"

I took a bite out of my popsicle. "No, I don't think it's a dumb idea. As a matter of fact I'm all for it. I just don't think you're thinking big enough. Why just Chuck and Di? Why not Andy and Fergie, too?"

He looked at me suspiciously. "Is this the same woman who calls my interest in royalty an anachronistic absurdity? The person who keeps reminding me that the Men of Kent came to Scituate to get out of the King's reach? Who points out that we fought a whole revolution so we could live in a country without kings or queens or princes or princesses? The same individual, I might add, who tells me I should avoid fat and cholesterol and who is now putting butter on an english muffin?

I shrugged. "So? I changed my mind.

"I even took my 'There's No Such Thing as Too Rich or Too Thin' motto off the bathroom mirror."

He felt my forehead. "Maybe you should lie down for a while," he suggested.

"Don't be silly," I snapped. "I'm just your average intelligent person who knows enough to change her mind when circumstances change.

"When you first started your campaign to bring the Prince and Princess of Wales to Angelo's snack bar, there was no royal sister-in-law. The princess you had in mind had managed to have two babies and lose weight in the process. I've never really believed the rumor that they can't let her have lemonade because she keeps falling through the straw, but I have it on very good authority that when she stands sideways she's invisible.

"The Duchess of York is another matter entirely. Not cut from the same brisket, you might say. And even I can see that she's heralding the dawn of an entire new day for us, um, full-figured women. After all, a prince fell in love with her just as she is. And as she is includes 40 inch hips."

The Dragon studied his fingernails. "I've heard you say," he began with studied nonchalance, "that you'd kill for 40 inch hips."

I had the grace to blush. "The exact measurements don't matter. What matters is that the Duchess is a very beautiful woman even though she isn't a size three. And Prince Andrew, who I believe is something of an authority on feminine pulchritude, thinks shes just swell. Every inch of her."

"So you think I should invite them all to a cookout?" he asked.

"Absolutely. We'll serve ribs with lots of barbeque sauce. The nice, meaty country style type. And fried chicken. And corn on the cob just dripping with butter. And lots and lots of rolls and cheeses, and piles of potato salad and cole slaw. Forget watermelon for dessert. We'll go for pecan pie and strawberry shortcake. Lots of whipped cream on both. Then we'll toast marshmallows. Masses of marshmallows. Who knows? We may even be able to lure Princess Di into the real world where men are men and women have hips. Next year we may even be able to bring back busts."

The Dragon looked thoughtful.

"There's a lot to what you say," he admitted. "But you've forgotten one thing.

"Elizabeth and Philip still have one unmarried royal son. From all accounts Their Royal Highnesses third son, Edward, is the best looking of the lot.

"What if you encourage women to become, um, full-figured, and when Prince Edward chooses his bride all the styles change again?"

"It's a frightening thought," I admitted. "I guess I'll have to keep my fingers crossed and hope he goes for short, ah, well-fleshed brunettes."

"You could do that," he agreed. "Or you could just bear in mind that I happen to be partial to short well-fleshed females of the brunette-going-to-gray persuasion."

I smiled at him. "Hip, hip hooray," I agreed.

Judy Gilman update: Life at the Greenery

(Judy Gilman, Hingham Mariner editor, was seriously injured in an auto accident June 12, 1985 in Hingham. She is recuperating from serious head and leg injuries and is continuing to undergo therapy at the Greenery in Brighton. This is Judy's account of the facility and her daily schedule. This article also represents Judy's longest written article since her accident. She also sends her best wishes to all who have expressed concern and hope for her miraculous recovery.)

By Judy Gilman
Special to the Mariner

The Greenery of Brighton is definitely one of the benefits of living in the Boston area (it's located in Brighton).

When people hear about a near-fatal accident, they are so grateful that the victim survived that they don't understand the problems caused by brain injuries.

The Greenery is one of the few places in the country which deals with and treats that sort of injury.

Although there are about 400 more specialized care facilities in the U.S. as a whole, it becomes obvious to you how rare they are as soon as you ask the other patients what their home states are.

The answers may surprise you — North Carolina, California, Wisconsin, Idaho, Nebraska — but it underlies once again what a rare place the Greenery is.

The Greenery was founded in 1971 as a regular nursing home for the aged. It was converted to a rehabilitative facility in 1975 when the doctors affiliated with it kept admitting young, brain-injured patients.

At first a 40-bed unit was used to house those patients. That unit was expanded in 1978 and now the building has 201 beds. It was a growing need that forced such expansion.

Head injuries are the leading cause of deaths in those under 34 years old. There are 50,000 to 90,000 serious head injuries a year in this country. And the average patient age here at the Greenery is 24 years old. The average patient stay at the Greenery is 18 months. These patients create a lot of work for the attendants (or aides, as they are called formally).

All 150 of these aides, not to mention the four full-time doctors on the staff, along with many specialists and consultants work at the Greenery.

There are so many people involved because most of the patients need to be helped 24 hours a day. There is no break in the work schedule. There's always at least one ringing his (or her) bell and demanding service.

The Greenery is located at 99 Chestnut Hill Avenue, Brighton. The plot it is located on is hilly and very attractive (and has many rock garden spots on it). The plants here are colorful and give off a delightful fragrance. With that and a nice breeze — what more could you ask for on a hot summer day?

Of course, in a specialized place like the Greenery, the daily cost is rather high but that is all-inclusive, covering housing, doctor's visits and therapies.

But when you consider how much staff that pays for, that you're getting very good therapies and three square meals a day, and that the surroundings are pretty; it's not a bad deal by any means.

One of the main problems of the Greenery is personified by its patients. A head injury, is a very strange thing.

What it produces is a blank spot in your memory and a lack of control. There are people at the Greenery who are paralyzed, can't talk, swallow, hear or are blind.

And there are those who come complete with casts that are mending broken bones. And there are the problems that you don't notice at the first glance. Bladder infections and impacted bowels are common problems. That's the body's reaction to severe injury; use all the body's energy to get well as soon as possible and never mind the organ's usual functions.

As well as having a central care facility, the Greenery is also divided into departments: speech, occupational therapy, recreation, and physical therapy. Then there are the specialized groups of patients — ranging from Problem-Solving to Pragmatics and MAT (Memory and Thinking). In short, there's something for everyone. They really do keep the patients busy around here.

To top all this off, the Greenery has its own monthly pamplet, called "The Limelight."

The one thing that strikes a patient when out in the "real" world is how grateful we should be that such a helpful facility like the Greenery is here.

A daily schedule

Following a friend's suggestion, I'll give you an exploratory walk through my Thursday so you can see what the Greenery is like. I will also note differences between Thursday and the rest of the week.

To start off, I get up early — even on weekends I am awake and ready to go at 5 a.m.

Pretty soon the aide comes and takes me to the shower. I can now shampoo my hair, shower myself, get dry and get dressed again. Then the aide takes me back to my room, where I get dressed and then put my makeup on.

At 7 a.m. everyday I go to the dining room for breakfast. I take a book along with me to help pass the time. Breakfast finally comes and I eat.

Then there's physical therapy on the second floor at 9 a.m. Monday through Friday. That lasts half an hour. There are about eight patients and three therapists in the room. They pretty much let us do what we want to do. I do my weight-lifting, 30 sit-ups, three toe-touches and 30 lady's push-ups. We all leave at 8:30 a.m.

On Thursday I next have a break, but on Monday and Wednesday I next have speech on the ground floor at 8:30 a.m. We do various sorts of organization exercise. Lately, she has been giving me five words. I have to tell her which one doesn't belong with the others and why it doesn't fit. It really makes you think.

Next comes Auditory Comprehension, which is a speech group. It meets at 10 a.m. The therapist will read us an article and then ask us true-false and multiple-choice questions. You really have to pay attention! That lasts for an hour.

On Monday and Wednesday I meet with Teresa, my leisure therapist, and on Tuesday it's another speech session.

Then at 11 a.m. there is a session on the second floor with Joseph, my special education therapist. I have all sorts of interesting conversations with him and do a lot of writing for him. I meet him everyday but Tuesday, when I meet with Doreen, my occupational therapist.

At 11:30 on Thursday I meet with Susan, my social worker, in her office on the ground floor. Then I go to lunch at noon.

Every weekday I have physical therapy on the ground floor at 1 p.m. for an hour with either Lisa or Denise, the two therapists assigned to me. After they let me take a walk on Chestnut Hill. Very nice!

Thursday at 2 p.m. there is Independent Typing in the Recreation room. On Monday I would be meeting with Susan and on Friday there is the MAT group meeting.

At 3 p.m. there is a meeting with Doreen, my occupational therapist, for half an hour. On Tuesday, I have recreation at that time. Otherwise, it is free.

Then, from 3:45 to 5:45 p.m. on Thursday my laundry group meets. That means that we walk to a nearby laundromat and do a week's worth of wash. Obviously, if it rains, we don't go.

And then we come back and have dinner. And on Tuesday and Thursday nights I then go to my speech group upstairs in the special education classroom. It has been a busy day!

vol. VIII, no. 45 | 383-6731/545-7060 | thursday, august 7, 1986 | 2 sections | 35 cents

Cohasset is entertained

Long before the film reaches movie theatres, "The Witches of Eastwick" is receiving rave reviews by audiences that flock to see it.

It matters not that hundreds of people, toddlers, housewives, vacationing businesspeople, and gray-haired seniors, wait in the simmering sun for hours. When they finally catch a momemtary glimpse of Jack Nicholson, it's worth the perspiration and patience.

Each day hundreds of people, mostly out-of-towners, gather behind the barricades to watch out-of-sequence scenes being filmed. Hours of waiting finally produced a distant glance at their favorite movie star.

'Here's . . . Johnny'

And Nicholson, always prepared for a scene, worked the crowd like a pro. Smiling, laughing, and signing autographs, the crowd was treated this week to a welcomed dose of the amiable superstar. He lifted babies into the air, and obliged autograph seekers after the completion of his scenes.

The devil has arrived.

"He gave us all a day we will never forget," said Sue Straley, owner of the 'Eastwick Deli' aka Cards 'n Shards.

Filming within the small antique building on South Main Street was completed in one day. The scene was one in which Nicholson awaits his turn at the village Deli. He orders, then leaves the store for more downtown shopping.

While the fantasies of film were being shot, Sue stood behind the scenes.

"We had about 20 close friends and relatives standing over by the stationery with us. We had a great day. The director allowed me to look through the camera so I could see what the scene would look like," she said.

As the rehearsals wore on, a call was made, summoning the shop keeper to the cash register.

"The man who plays the deli clerk rang up the price of the bagel that Nicholson buys in the scene. Except he rang up $8,888 for the bagel. Then the machine started pinging and wouldn't stop," she laughed. "I'm not too good with machines, but I got it to stop."

For the one-day shoot, the interior of the "mini department store" was completely converted. Cafe curtains hung along the front windows. Paper signs detailing the day's special purchases were taped to the windowpane.

A large counter greeted the customer as he walked into the store. Large glass jars containing pickles, pastries and candies were atop the counter. A blackboard with the day's specials was located on the wall behind the counter.

Small cafe tables were lined along the front and side windows. In the film's scene, Nicholson was sitting at one of the front tables. He picked a customer number and waited to be called.

Straley recalled, "he's sitting on the chair and he seems to be in a fog. They call his number again, and he turns around and says, 'that's me.' Then he says he wants some bagles, cheese and some loxs. You'd think he was really purchasing something, they way he looks and the way he talks. Then he says he wants some ice cream. The clerk tells him there's no ice cream because the refrigerator broke. So he tells him he just wants the fish and the bread and then he's out the door! It took him about two takes and that was it."

Nicholson, according to this devoted fan, "is just fantastic. He allowed photos and gave autographs. Jack entertained Cohasset for a day."

Long hours for production assistant - he loves it !

By Jane Lane

Summer in Cohasset has always been idyllic for Andy Weltman. A longtime resident of Chestnut Hill, Andy looked forward each year to his summers spent along the rocky shores of Cohasset.

This summer is even more special for the Brown University senior. For the past two months, Andy has been a part of the crew creating "The Witches of Eastwick."

This is the summer Andy has dreamed of.

Despite his background which includes a family of attorneys and physicians, Andy decided he wanted to pursue a career in film.

"That's not really the practical thing to do," the blond 22 year-old admitted. "But my family wasn't against it. They've been very supportive."

Andy is an English major at Brown with one semester left before graduation. He explained the path that lead him to his first contact with Hollywood.

"It was a lot of luck and persistence," he stated.

"I was in school in Rhode Island and heard all about Little Compton and how they wanted to make this film there. So I sent my resume to the Rhode Island Film Commission. When I got home, my Dad showed me the papers - that they were going to film the movie in Cohasset. I couldn't believe it!

"I sent about ten resumes to the Massachusetts Film Bureau and I called them just about every day. I was doing some shopping one day in the Village and saw the "Witches" van down there. I talked with Polly Platt, the film's art designer. She introduced me to the production manager, because I wanted to be a production assistant. I ran back home to get another resume. Then I called back the next week and they said there were no openings for a production assistant, but they needed interns. I was very happy to be an intern. Anything, just to work on the film."

During the pre-production work in June, Andy was assigned to the Sonesta Hotel in Cambridge, headquarters of the "Witches"' production crew. There, Andy was trained as a general office 'gopher.' He worked 16 hour days, but never tired of the activity.

"I woke up at 6 a.m. and sometimes didn't get home to 1 a.m. But it's been great. The earliest I ever got home was 10 p.m. It was kind of hard commuting into Cambridge from Cohasset, but now it's terrific," he said.

About a month into his pre-production work, the crew arrived from Los Angeles. In the meantime, he became acquainted with Lynn O'Hare, the assistant to the producer and director. She needed an assistant. Waiting until they found his replacement, Andy soon became O'Hare's assistant.

He is no longer a part of the hotel crew, but is seen on location helping to control the crowds that gather each morning along the film's set.

His latest assignment as a crowd controller pleases the easy-going young man. "I love it. I try to be as polite as possible. The people watching the filming are super. They are as enthusiastic as I am. I get to know a lot of people - lots of them return each day to see the filming. They've been wonderful. I'm even starting to get some friends in the crowd."

He's worn Red Sox for 50 years

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

In 1936, a 16-year-old high school sophomore from Cohasset left home to play professional baseball.

This week, Red Sox scout Bill Enos celebrated not only his 66th birthday, but his 50th year in baseball.

"It was during the depression when I signed," he said, "and an $80 per month salary looked pretty good for a 16-year-old. Later, in Louisiana the young first baseman was netting $100 per month.

"The owner of the team told me not to tell anyone what I was making," Enos recalled, "because I was one of the high-paid players."

After 10 years and many miles, he left the minor leagues for a four year stint with a team called the U. S. Navy.

Between battles he kept his baseball career alive, playing for the Navy baseball team alongside a number of major leaguers, including Bob Feller.

"I got out of the service in January 1946," he said, "and went to spring training with Toledo of the American Association. And I played in the Texas League in San Antonio."

After four years of managing minor league clubs in places like Mayfield, Kentucky and Pittsburgh, Kansas and Ada, Oklahoma, Enos entered major league scouting for the St. Louis Browns in 1951.

He later went to Kansas City, before coming home to Massachusetts and joining the Boston Red Sox organization in 1973.

In his tenure, Enos has signed some big-name ball players: Skip Lockwood; Rich Gedman; John Tudor and Rob Woodward.

"There's been a lot of changes in baseball," he commented. "I'm talking about free agents. You can't just go sign a player today, you know."

He explained, college rules stipulate players must stay at school until the end of their junior year, or until they are 21 years old. "Now, you have to make sure they've graduated."

Although players are bigger, stronger and have better equipment than when Enos played ball, he explained, "It still isn't easy for a young fellow to go away and play baseball because they have to play

Sergeant examination results

Four Cohasset police officers passed the most recent Civil Service examination for the position of police sergeant. The four officers include Brian Noonan, Richard Abbadessa, David Pomerico, and Laurence Ainslie.

Executive secretary Donald Andrew said the exact scores of the tests have not been forwarded to the selectmen. A list of the officers who took the exam and their test results should be prepared by the state by Labor Day, he was told.

Once selectmen receive the individual scores from Civil Service, they will interview the four officers. There are currently two vacancies for sergeant in the department. There is currently no sergeant on the day shift, he explained. If the list is ready by Labor Day, Andrew said two sergenats should be appointed by mid-September.

Local pharmacist gets injunction

Ralph Harrison, owner of Cohasset Colonial Pharmacy, won the first round in his fight to prohibit Stop and Shop and MediMart from selling prescription drugs below cost.

A preliminary injunction was handed down in Norfolk County Superior Court last week against the pharmacy which was owned by Stop and Shop. Harrison filed the unfair sales complaint two years ago. In May, the 64-store MediMart chain was sold to the Walgreen Co. of Chicago.

Harrison alleged that Stop and Shop was trying to drive him out of business in Cohasset Village by underpricing its pharmaceutical drugs at the MediMart store at the Cushing Plaza on Rte. 3A.

The injunction handed down last Friday states that Stop and Shop "or any other individual or entity" could not sell prescription drugs below cost. It also stated that Harrison would be prohibited from doing the same.

Marlette committee chairman

The Cohasset School Facilities Committee recently elected George Lane Marlette of Cohasset chairman of the town's school facilities committee.

Marlette, who serves as the director of Government Relations for the Massachusetts/Rhode Island Chapter of Associated Builders & Contractors, was first appointed to the school facilities committee in 1984 by Town Moderator William Weeks.

As director of Government Relations at ABC, Marlette has guided the Massachusetts/Rhode Island chapter into the Professional Liability Insurance Information Exchange, a coalition of businesses and professional groups examining the current insurance liability crisis. Working with other groups including the Massachusetts Society of Professional Engineers, the Boston Society of Architects, and the Massachusetts Business Roundtable, Marlette and ABC hope to fashion a legislative solution to the liability crisis by 1987.

In addition to his duties with ABC and the Cohasset School Facilities Committee, Marlette is entering his third year at the New England School of Law in Boston. A 1983 graduate of Gettysburg College in Gettysburg, PA, he also attended the Derby Academy in Hingham and the Holderness School in Plymouth, NH.

Shuttle schedule at library

Representative Mary Jeanette Murray (R) Third Plymouth District, has supplied the Hingham, Cohasset and Hull public libraries with the time schedule for the Airport Water Shuttle operated by Massport.

The shuttle operates from Marina Bay in Quincy, Pemberton Pier in Hull, or the Hingham commuter boat pier to Long Wharf, Commonwealth Pier/The World Trade Center, or Rowes Wharf in downtown Boston, which continues on to Logan Airport.

The young crowd prefers chlorine over sand

By John O'Donnell
Mariner Staff

Many prefer sand, surf and saltwater, but some serious swimmers savor the sanctity of the Cohasset Swim Center.

"The ocean is all salty," said David Coletti, 14, of Church Street. "Here they have a diving board, and it's easier to swim."

"I like the swim team," said 14-year-old Veronica deVos. "Also, the diving board is fun."

"High school kids tend to go to the beach," said swim center director Mike Gill. "It's more a social thing with them.

"The swim center isn't the social thing the high school kids want," he said, "but a lot of kids below high school age spend all day here."

The swim center, located off of Sohier Street across from the Osgood School playground, offers a variety of programs for both young and old.

The center offers Red Cross swimming lessons for both children and adults, from a program for beginners to advanced lifesaving.

There is also an adapted aquatics program, which offers more individualized instruction for people who have difficulties learning to swim.

"Our Red Cross swim program has been run by Joan Buckley for a long time," said Gill. "She does a fantastic job."

There is also a "water babies" program for children one to five years old. In addition, the swim center is used by the Cohasset Recreation Commission and the South Shore Collaborative.

"The idea of the pool is for it to be a family recreation center," said Gill, who has been pool director for three years. "It's a great place for kids."

Parents said their children benefit from the swim center.

"Children don't learn to swim at the beach," said Jane Goedecke of Nichols Road. "They find it easier to swim here."

"It's a challenge for children to learn to swim in the deep pool," said Judy Kasameyer of Pond Street. "Once a child can swim the length of the pool he is allowed to go in by himself.

"The summer a kid learns to swim in the deep pool is a special summer for them," she said.

Signs throughout town point to work of Hassan

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

One Cohasset man has left his mark all over town. Though you may not have noticed, the signs are all around you.

David Hassan picked up the art of wood carving 15 years ago. Today, his carved signs are all over the United States.

"I just kind of fell into it," he explained. "I was a math major in college and got very bored, so I dropped out.

"I painted houses for a couple of years and started fooling around with wood carving," he said.

Hassan discovered wood carving was something he really enjoyed.

"The first couple of projects, I didn't even know there was such a thing as wood carving; I was doing it with little jackknives and exacto knives," he said.

"Then, a friend gave me a catalogue from a place in Woburn that sells wood carving tools and I said, 'Jesus, they make tools for this; this is pretty good!'"

So, it turned out, was Hassan at wood carving.

He and his friend Chuck Dorr rented a dilapidated barn in Cohasset center in 1971, and opened up a business.

"It started slowly," he recalled. "For the first three or four years, I did just about everything myself, from building the panels to doing the layouts, carving and finish work."

In time, the business picked up.

"People seemed to like the things I was doing," he said. "I was always pretty critical of it; I'm still critical of my work."

He recalled, "I drew a lot as a little kid, but when I turned eight or nine, I started playing little league sports and later, high school sports. I never did any artwork again, until I started doing the carving."

He added, "I look at my first four or five years in business as more of an art school for myself, because I never had any art training."

He added, "Once I got involved in the carving, I realized if you want to carve something, it certainly helps if you can draw it.

"If you can't draw something," he explained, "you're not going to be able to carve it. So, I bought some books on drawing, and it's pretty much self-taught.

"Once in a while," he added, "at night I'll sit down and do a charcoal or pen-and-ink drawing just to amuse myself."

Apparently, Hassan is also a good teacher.

"I've sold a couple of drawings," he said, "but nothing serious. I've done a couple of oil paintings, but that's mostly for me too. I enjoy it."

His hobbies turned out to be a good way of mixing business with pleasure. But there's definitely a business-side to Hassan's artistic activities

"I've learned a lot over the past 15 years," he said. "There's a lot that goes into this business. The art end of it is very involved, but beside the woodworking, you have to know how to see something in three dimensions from a flat drawing."

Hassan described the evolution of his enterprise.

"I winged it pretty much," he said. "At first, I'd have people come in and say, 'Can you do this? Can you do this?' and I'd say, 'Sure.'

"Then they'd leave and I'd scratch my head and say, 'Jesus, how the hell am I going to do this?'"

Hassan said he worked rather slowly at first, but didn't much care as long as the project turned out well.

"When I started," he explained, "I was very quality conscious; it didn't go out of the shop until I was happy with it."

He added, "Obviously, you get faster as you go along. I think that was a good attitude to have, because it kept up the quality; if you learn to do quality first, the speed will come later."

Over the years, Hassan's reputation grew and his business boomed. He moved his shop to Route 3A and hired helpers.

"When I started," he said, "I did everything myself. Now, I don't get a chance to do as much of the carving as I'd like to sometimes.

"I've had to turn into more of a businessman, just to keep the office work straight."

But Hassan pointed out, "I do all the designs; I could probably spend 70 hours per week just doing designs and pricing, because people don't know what they want when they come in.

"Usually," he explained, "they've seen something they like and they want something similar. I have to pick their brains a little bit and try to get an idea for what they're like and what their tastes are."

In 1975, Hassan and his then partner, Chuck Dorr constructed The Sea Captain at Kimball's by the Sea.

"That was a major undertaking," Hassan recalled. "He's seven-and-a-half feet tall; just putting together the big planks of wood to start was a big project."

He explained, "He's all built out of two-inch thick pine that we laminated together. And we bolted a threaded rod to hold him together."

Hassan said they went into the project without "an attack plan."

He said, "If I did that project now, I'd do it a lot differently than we did it then. I'd have a model pose in that stance and take pictures and do full-size working drawings."

One of Hassan's favorite projects was the sign at the Red Lion Inn.

"That was a lot of fun," he said. "We made that out of a two-and-a-half foot pine log, which had Appeals board grants variance on Margin St.

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

The zoning board of appeals Thursday signed a variance, which gave William DiGregorio of 52 Margin Street relief from an unusual set of circumstances.

"The situation," explained Paul Kaufman, DiGregorio's attorney, "involves a structure built in 1977. At the time, we believe . . . and I think we have sufficient evidence to show you, that it was built pursuant to a duly authorized and issued building permit.

"However," he explained, "the records of the town, and particularly those of the building department, are missing with respect to the issuance of the permit."

Kaufman produced a copy of the permit application, with a notation indicating there was indeed a permit issued.

Ironically, a recent survey was conducted and revealed that the building appears to be too close to the side lot line. The survey was part of DiGregorio's effort to convey the property.

Although DiGregorio added to the structure, the "offending" portion of the building had existed since 1977.

According to Kaufman, since the condition existed without appeal for more than six years, an enabling statute permits the non-conforming structure to continue to exist in its present form.

He added, "My client (DiGregorio) has had an opportunity to talk with the current building inspector's predecessor, who in fact recalls this situation and recalls the issuance of the building permit. They felt they had made an adequate determination of the property line."

He added, "Mr. DiGregorio has also spoken to all the abutters and they have no objection to the existing condition."

He explained, the lot is unique — long, thin and ledgy.

The board agreed, in light of the evidence Kaufman presented, that the lot does not conflict with the neighbors, nor hold the neighborhood up to any potential disharmony.

It agreed the enabling statute did apply and that the buyer's position was "conservative."

Kaufman conjured up a text for the variance and the board signed it before adjourning.

In other ZBA action, David and Francis Burnham of 30 Atlantic Avenue presented a proposal to reestablish the contour of their back yard, which they had previously altered.

Their plan was to remove fill and build a paved swale to connect with a pre-existing drainage system in the salt marsh behind their house.

"With this proposal, we would work below the 10-foot contour to move excess material which was previously placed there."

The Burnham's reason for re-establishing the original condition of their back yard, according to Francis Burnham is to eliminate mosquito breeding puddles and make the back yard usable.

The board said it would take the matter under advisement and get recommendations from the town drainage committee and the conservation commission.

grown in Cohasset; I think that's pretty neat."

He added, "That was a job we got carried away on. When I figured doing that job, it was only supposed to be cut out and done as a relief on both sides.

"But then," he explained, "we started doing it and I thought, 'The Red Lion Inn is a real old, historic building in town,' and I knew the guy who owned it pretty well, so said, 'let's do something really good for him.'"

If you've seen the sign, you know it is something special.

"We ended up with a six-inch panel and a piece of sculpture in the middle. I think that lion really has a lot of style."

Today, Hassan's signs decorate towns all over the country.

"I was in Detroit about four years ago," he recalled. "My brother-in-law was getting married there and we were just kind of cruising around through the city, when I said, 'That looks like one of my signs. And it was. Just about anywhere I go now, I see some of my work. Sometimes, it surprises me."

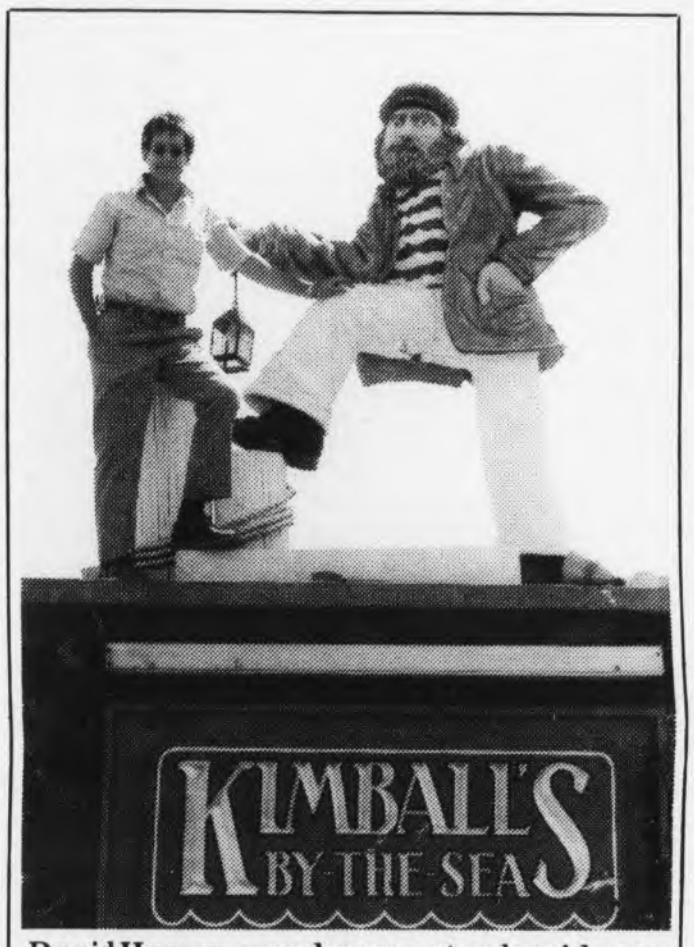
Hassan's work speed did eventually pick up. He now puts out about 400 to 500 signs per year.

"It's nice to be driving through town and see my signs," he said. "It's like I've been the decorator of outside Cohasset for the past 15 years."

He added, "There's a lot of personal satisfaction in taking a rough sawn board and ending up with something like the Red Lion Inn sign.

"I hope someday, there will be a couple of them hanging in the Cohasset Historical Museum downtown after I'm dead and gone.

He explained, "I'd at least have some kind of mark that I was here, and that I contributed something positive."



David Hassan, woodcarver, stands aside one of his more familiar works at Cohasset Harbor.

Cohasset resident 'just doing a job'

And the first question they ask of the official Warner Brothers crew member - "How do you like L.A.?" he laughed.

His conversation exudes enthusiasm as he talks excitedly about the Hollywood masters he has met and befriended. Idols such as director George Miller, cinematographer Vilmos Zsigmund and actors Nicholson, Sarandon, Cher, and Pfeiffer are no longer worshipped heroes on a silver screen. They've come alive in Cohasset.

"My eyes are wide open," he said last week, taking a lunch break from the set to sit along the common. "This is all amazing. I'm working really long hours, but it's going very quickly. I eat, drink and sleep this movie."

The greatest surprise to Weltman are the people with whom he is working. "When I was thinking about film as my career, there was always a drawback - the people. I thought they'd be arrogant. But the people on "Witches" are so down-to-earth. They really care about each other."

"Cher - I think I'm most surprised about her. She's really down-to-earth. I don't know her that well. But watching her give autographs and pose for photographs - I don't know if I'd be as accommodating if I was an actor," he noted.

"All four actors are really nice," Andy continued. "They have been great working with the children who are extras in the film. Susan is so good with them. They're on the set for about 12 hours and she plays with them. She's getting very close to the kids."

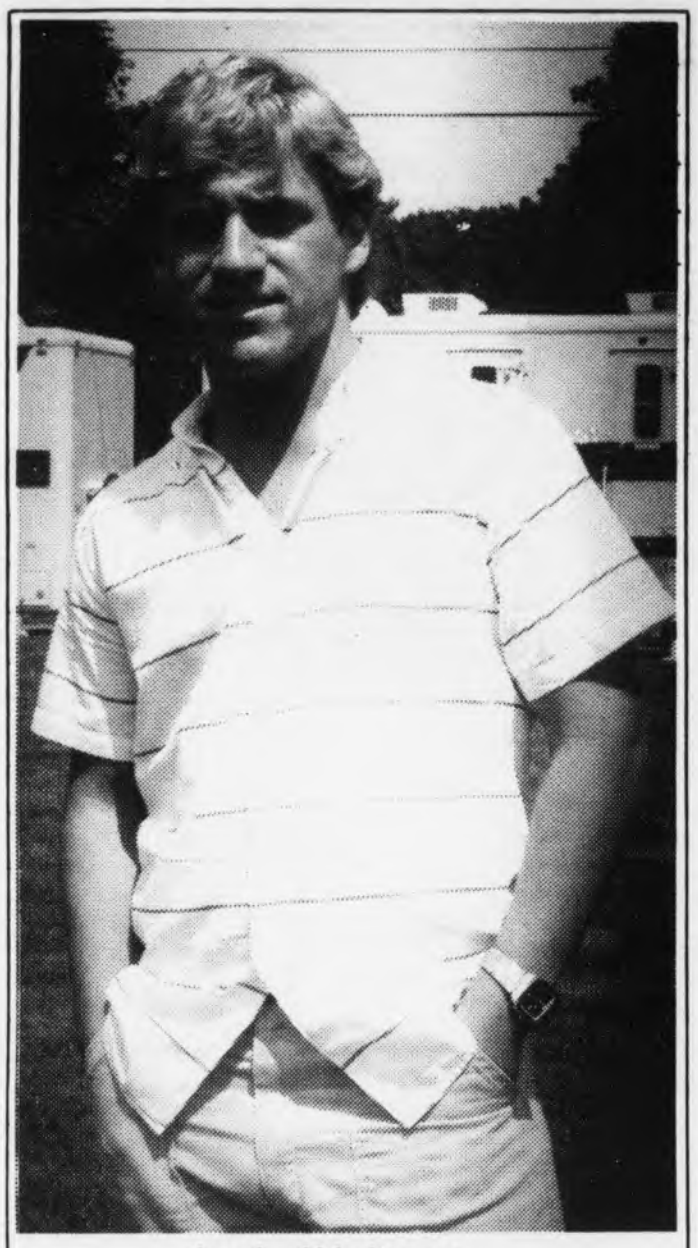
One day, after a particularly long day on the film set, Michelle Pfeiffer, who in the movie portrays a mother of six, invited the kids back to her house in Boston for a pizza party.

Nicholson, according to the Cohasset resident, "is really funny. I know him the least. But from what I've seen, he's a real joker. He keeps the set lively, and he has this outrageous laugh.

"They're all normal people - that's what I couldn't believe. They don't treat me like they're any higher. We're all just doing a job," he added.

Weltman, who is observing all aspects of this production, is particularly impressed with the work of director Miller. "Believe me, this is going to be a terrific movie. I've seen some of the rushes (the day's film sequences) and I think this will be a classic.

"This is not a horror film," he emphasized. "It won't give Cohasset a bad name. The top people in Hollywood are making this film. I think Little Compton is really going to regret saying no. This film is going to put Cohasset on the map. People will come to Cohasset and say, 'oh, that's where they filmed Witches of Eatswick.' I really think this will be a classic film."



Andy Weltman

The director is an extremely sensitive, creative artist, according to Weltman. His high regard for the director of Mad Max - Beyond the Thunderdome was well-founded.

Miller, who is Australian, has brought his wife, infant daughter, and his parents to the states during the filming. Weltman recently had the assignment of bringing Miller's parents on a personal tour of Cohasset.

"They loved it!" he exclaimed. "His mother is a real movie buff. She's been taking pictures on the set. They have so much pride in their son. Since I know Cohasset, I was asked to drive them around town. I took them along Jerusalem Road - they thought it was gorgeous. Then we stopped at my house on Gammons Road and had some ice tea with my mother. It was great, and my mother was thrilled!"

Earlier, Weltman was responsible for stocking the homes where the stars are temporarily residing. "I was helping the actors get set up in their homes," he explained. "Once filming started, they would be living in these homes for about three or four months, so they needed some supplies and appliances. That's when I got to know them. And I was back and forth to Lechmere's so much, I got to know the security man at the back door. I was even offered a job there. I had to buy them things like televisions, stereos, telephones. Not extravagant things. And I usually got the cheapest thing available. Everyone is on a budget during filming, so no one is extravagent."

At various times throughout the production, the actors' families have arrived for visits. Cher's daughter, Chastity, was staying in Boston for a while, as well as Sarandon's young daughter. "From what I've seen, they have very close families. It must be really difficult being separated for so long. It's really tough. I think that's why they get so close to everyone on the set. For the entire time it takes to film, the crew members are family," Weltman observed.

The college student is unsure what aspect of filmmaking he will pursue. His immediate plans are to stay with "Witches" until production is ended. Then he will finish his last two credits at school. After that, he will probably take up residence in L.A.

"I don't want to leave Boston, but I need to be in L.A. for at least five or six years. I don't know about film school yet. I'll try to get a job out there," he said.

For Weltman, this has been summer he will never forget.

"I threw out all my previous plans for the summer," he confessed. "I was going to U.S.C.. and then I was going to travel through Europe with some friends. But instead, I just came home to look for a job. It must have been fate or something.

"Who would ever have thought Hollywood would be coming to my hometown to make a film? This is a one in a million chance. I guess it's just luck and timing."

No one is turned away from membership

A family membership at the swim center costs $100 a year. Individual adult memberships can be purchased for $65, and individual junior memberships cost $50.

The swim center was built in 1974, with funds donated by the Bancroft family.

"The official name of the pool was changed in 1984 to the Bancroft Swim Center in recognition of the Bancroft family," said Gill. "The pool is presently owned by a family trust."

Gill said the pool doesn't turn a profit. "Memberships are at such a price that we don't break even," he said.

"Our fees are low so that everybody can use the pool," he said. "We don't want it to be a hardship for anyone. Sometimes, because our prices are so low, a family will send in a donation in addition to their membership fee."

Gill said scholarships are available for residents who can't afford the membership fee. "We never deny anyone for financial reasons," he said.

The swim center, which has over 100 family memberships, has a very successful swim team, Gill said.

"Last year we were undefeated," he said, "and this year we have four wins and a loss."

The swim and diving team, coached by Jay Santini, Maureen Buckley and Mike DeSantis, competes against the Scituate Yacht Club, Hanover Swim Club and other area clubs.

"I've learned a lot about diving here," said 14-year-old Michelle Massa of North Main Street. "The diving instruction is pretty good."

Togetherness is a happy and victorious swim team. Members (l to r): Laura Smart, Veronica deVos, and Laura Smart show off some winning smiles. (Alan Chapman photo)

"I like jumping off the diving board," said Matt O'Connor, 7, of Lantern Lane. "This is a good place to come."

While members do like to visit the ocean, they also enjoy coming to the swim center.

"It's nearby," said Kathy Anderson, "and when you have little kids you don't have to worry about the sand or anything."

"It's warmer than the ocean," said Stephen Patterson, 13, of Parker Avenue. "I come here every day."

"Kids can meet their friends here," said Kasameyer. "It's a nice place to meet."

around town

☐ Who has the largest smile "around town" these days? Is it Vi Tuthill, or Jeff and Don Steele? They all have every right to be wearing ear-to-ear specials, there is a new baby in the family! Jeff and Don's son (Vi's grandson), Randy, and his wife Andrea presented all of them with their first Steele . . . Derek Joseph, born at South Shore Hospital on July 31st and weighing in at a hefty 7 lbs. 13 ozs. Once again Great-grandmother Tuthill will be walking with a baby carriage, that much is for certain! And, here's betting that little Derek is already a charter member at Sandy Beach!

☐ Coleby Mantz wanted a little space in Around Town this week, a thank you note from Germany . . .and I quote: "I'd like to thank Mrs. Corbett, Mrs. Rossi, Mrs. Maitens and all other AFS staff members for making my stay here in West Germany possible. This summer will be a long remembered experience. Sincerely, Coleby Mantz." Let's all hope we get filled in on details when Coleby returns, she's sure to have many a tale to relate to us! Meanwhile, continue to have a grand time!

☐ The Class of 1966 (CHS of course) is planning a great weekend for their reunion . . . it will be held on August 8, 9, 10 and the committee has a super agenda planned. Friday, Aug. 8, from 8p.m. to 12a.m. there will be a cocktail "early bird opportunity" to reflect over the last twenty years and it is requested that those going bring an hors d'oeurve. There will be a cash bar, and it sounds like a fun way to open the weekend. Saturday a "double-header" is planned. At noon, lunch will be at the Red Lion Inn, a familiar landmark, where the food choice and bill will be the alumus' responsibility, but the laughter and old stories will be free. That night the Great Hall in Faneuil Hall Marketplace will be the location for the reunion banquet. Laughter, more old stories and a gala buffet will highlight this fun-filled evening. As 1966 was a great year musically, they have contracted Jay Fiori Music to provide the best combination of that era, mixed with the sounds of today. It will be from 7p.m. to midnight and is $30 per person (minus $10 deposit). Sunday, August 10 is family beach day, the details will be made available on the 8th and 9th. They are even selling tee shirts to commemorate the event . . .the committee, consisting of Patty Colorio Haggerty, Mary Anne Bailey Hanson, Bob Jackson, Middie McGoodwin, Vin Nardo and Betty Ann Soule, sure have worked hard to make this a weekend to remember! Don't you wish you were a member of the Class of '66?

☐ Speaking of parties, the Cohasset Swim Center is planning one of its own for its members. It will be a family pool day, to be held on Sunday, Aug. 10 from 1-3p.m. There will be games, races, prizes, picnic lunches, etc. Be sure to check at the Swim Center for more details, and here's hoping that it turns out to be the first sunny Sunday in seven!!

☐Sheldon Ripley of Cohasset will be competing in the 41st annual Eastern Division Tournament of the American Lawn Bowls Association. The tournament opens Saturday, August 2 and continues throught Thursday, August 7 on the bowling greens at Merrymount Park in Quincy and at Cunningham Park in Milton.

Bowling begins each day at 9 a.m. and continues throughout the day, usually finishing around four. The public is invited to attend; there is no admission charge. Experienced bowlers will be on hand, ready to explain the fine points of the game.

☐ Kenneth R. Harris received a BA degree at the 165th commencement exercises of Colby College, Sunday, May 25. Harris, a human development major, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Marvin R. Harris of Cohasset. He is a graduate of Westwood High School in Westwood.

☐ More beaming grandparents! John and Diane Mello of Bayberry Lane are pleased to announce the arrival, on July 14, of Katherine Elizabeth Adams. Diane's daughter Betsy (Taylor) and Richard Adams are proud parents, and paternal grandparents are Maj. (Ret.) Frank and Jean Adams of Burlington. Betsy is a 1978 CHS graduate.

☐ Here's hoping that Steve Bobo is well on the way to full recouperation as he reads this, same with Jo Di Girolomo, who is also home after recent surgery. Speedy recovery to both of you!

☐ That's the news from here, be sure to let us know about your latest Happening!

This quilt is made from the 20 winning squares in the 1986 Quilt Block Contest sponsored by the Country Arts Committee. The quilt squares are interpretations of the theme "hearts," appliqued to coordinate with burgundy and rose, and sashed in burgundy.

All of the 126 blocks received as entries in the quilt block contest will be exhibited as part of the crafts exhibit, and visitors will choose their favorite square. The winning block's creator will receive a popular vote of $25.

The Country Arts Exhibit is located on the second floor of the Exhibition Hall and will be open from 11 a.m. to 9 p.m. each day of the fair which runs Wednesday, Aug. 13 through Sunday, Aug 24.

Prelude's non-event returns

The Prelude Concert Series will kick off its annual benefit non-event for 1986 at Scituate Heritage Days during the Aug. 9 street fair in Scituate Harbor.

Past years non-events have offered supporters the chance to "buy a ticket to 'nothing,' by making a tax-deductible donation of $3, with no further obligations ," explains Nancy Murray Young, Prelude's co-founder and director of communications.

"This year, in honor of our fifth anniversary season, we've added a raffle and all non-event ticket buyers will have the opportunity to win one of a number of lovely prizes, donated by local businesses, enabling them to have a little non-event of their own."

These prizes include a Swim and Trim membership at the Clipper Ship Motor Lodge in Scituate Harbor; a year's membership at P and C Video, North Scituate; gift certificates for dinner at the Mill Wharf, Scituate Harbor, P.J.'s Country House, Scituate and the Whiton House, Hingham; and a beautiful Howard Kaplan French Country Store edition music box donated by the Boston Music Company.

Several of Prelude's special fifth anniversary limited edition prints, designed by Weymouth artist Debra Wainwright, will also be awarded, as well as tickets to the two remaining fifth season concerts, featuring the Orford String Quartet, with James Campbell, clarinet (Oct. 25) and Trio Sonata (Jan. 25, 1987).

The print and music box will be displayed at Prelude's Heritage Days booth at the street fair Aug. 9 where non-event tickets will be available at $3 each ($2 for $5).

The Prelude Concert Series was founded in 1981 to bring outstanding classical muscians of international renown to South Shore audiences.

Past concerts at the Scituate town library and Scituate High School have included the exciting United States debut of British duo-pianists Antoinette and Claire Cann; Dutch violinist Jaap Schroeder of the Smithson String Quartet; the New England Harp trio featuring BSO harpist Ann Hobson Pilot; and sell-out summer concerts by the Empire Brass Quintet, the New Black Eagle Jazz Band and the Cambridge Buskers.

For more information about Prelude or the non-event, contact Barbara Lane, artistic director, Prelude, Box 109, North Scituate, Mass. 02060.

Shelter solution

With the activities surrounding filming "The Witches of Eastwick," it's a bit difficult to concentrate on other matters.

But even a recent occurrence during the filming, shows there are other concerns in the community. Last week, Warner Brothers crew members had a difficult, and almost dangerous problem. A lone, unleashed dog was repeatedly interrupting a sequence.

When crew members tried to capture the animal and restrain him, he barked and bit at them.

Just last week, the problem of free-roaming dogs was discussed by Hingham's animal control officer Paul Murphy. He presented selectmen with his ideas for the development of a regional animal shelter.

Hingham is experiencing similar problems as Cohasset. The problem? No facility in which these unlicensed, unleashed dogs can be held. There is no commercial kennel for the animal control officer of the local communities to board these stray animals.

The solution? The officers throughout the area are not picking up the stray dogs. Before incarcerating a canine, they will do everything within their means to locate the dog's owner. When that becomes impossible, the dog is held within the officer's van, the police station, his home, or is set free.

In neighboring towns, and in Cohasset, too, packs of unleashed dogs roam the streets. Anyone riding a bike, or walking for recreation, is a potential target.

The leash law has been virtually nullified by the lack of a boarding facility. Dog bites are becoming a more frequent occurrence. Littering of neighbors' lawns is common. People are afraid to walk down the street alone. These unleashed canines attack defenseless individuals.

What's the use of a leash law if we can't enforce it? "The dogs are running rampant," officer Murphy has told Hingham selectmen. "And it's been going on for two years."

Murphy, the senior animals control officer in the local area, has proposed a regional kennel for six area towns. Through his own initiative, he has gone to the other boards of selectmen for their endorsement.

We support this plan 100 percent. It will serve to remind the people of Cohasset that we certainly have a law against unleashed animals, and our animal control officers intend to enforce it.

Other neighboring towns, like Cohasset, have part-time animal control departments. They need the support of nearby communities. A facility is long overdue.

We endorse the regional plan developed by Murphy. It is the only solution to a growing, expensive problem. We'd like the other communities' involvement so the plans will proceed. Murphy predicts a facility, which he feels will be located in Hingham, will be voted at the April town meeting in that town.

We implore town officials and the taxpayers who will bear the cost of the facility, to allow the plan to proceed.

With Murphy in charge of the project, any shelter built will be a top quality structure. We wish the the study committee in Hingham the best of luck, and hope the neighboring communities understand the advantages to this well-planned solution.

Successful season for Sail Club

Cohasset Sailing Club's Vice Commodore, Steve Bartow reports the junior and adult training programs have passed the mid-season mark with one of the club's largest enrollments.

The junior program, under the direction of head instructor Alan Cooke, has a total of 116 enrolled. There are 51 students in beginning Able Seaman, 36 in Mate, seven in Sailing Master and 22 in Advanced Skipper.

Adult training instructor, Bob Jackson, reports near-capacity classes in both weekend programs. The Saturday morning beginners group has a total of 38 students and Sunday's intermediate class has 15 enrolled.

All students receive classroom instruction with an emphasis on in-the-boat training using the club's fleet of 10 Mercury and six new turnabout sailboats.

The Cohasset Sailing Club has provided instruction to over 4,000 students since its founding in 1960. Enrollment is open to any town resident.

Watching the Red Sox for 50 years

every day, and they're not used to playing every day."

Enos told of a youngster he signed to Elmira of the New York-Penn. League.

"He was 17 years old," he said, "and I don't think that's young. But it is when you have to compete against pro ball players."

He added, "If a young fellow can do something outstanding, he'll show you that.

"Like running and throwing; you can see that with your naked eye," he said. "But hitting is one of the hardest things to judge."

He explained, "For the most part, young ball players for the first year or two don't hit much."

Since the signing three years ago, Enos' prospect player has turned out to be a gem.

He made the all-star team in the New York-Penn. League. This year at Greensboro, he's got 15 home runs, is hitting .328 and is leading the team with 70 runs batted in.

"He's doing real well," the scout said. "There are things he has to learn.

"It isn't easy," he added. "Going from a 15-game season in high school to a 140-game schedule can be taxing. Playing every day isn't easy."

In addition to the conditioning, Enos said players must learn to get along with others and take orders from the coach and manager.

"That's why we have the minor leagues," he said. "to teach these things."

Human unpredictability has made Enos' job a challenge.

"You don't have a crystal ball," he said; "you can't look into it and say 'This fellow's going to play in the big leagues.' He might decide to be a brain surgeon.

"Desire is something you can't see until the youngster goes out to play."

Enos said, while baseball has changed with the draft and free agency and other rules, scouting has also changed.

"It used to be you would sneak in and nobody would know. It was cloak and dagger stuff, but it's not so much like that now, because there are so many scouts.

He explained, "I've been to look at some players and there were 25 to 30 scouts that came to look at that one player.

"If you think you're going to crawl out of bed and find another Babe Ruth, you have to think twice."

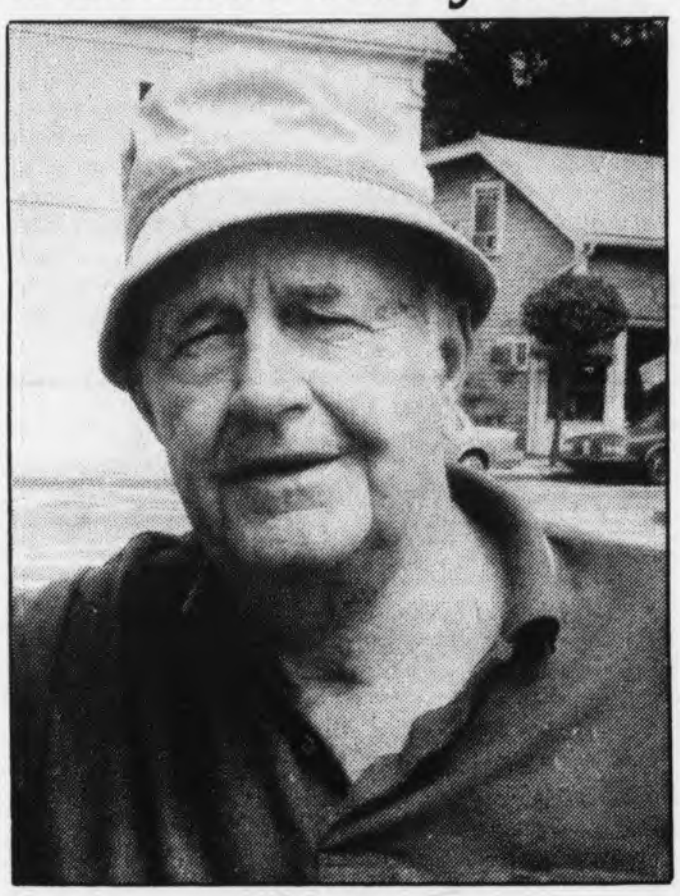
Enos said he keeps cards on all the prospects he's seen over the years.

Nearly every day, he is watching baseball. "I scout the 18-year-old Babe Ruth league, the Legion teams, high schools and colleges," he said.

"At every game, I get the lineup with the name, age, height and weight of every player. I mark everybody on how they run, hit, field and pitch. Then, I send the form to Fenway."

Enos estimated he has sent 14,000 names in since 1978. "They keep 'em."

So does he. "At home, I have a trunk full of cards on all the players I have seen in my 35 years of scouting," he said.



Bill Enos

When he returns from Arizona every April, after scouting professional teams in exhibition, Enos spends his summers in the ball parks of Massachusetts, Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont.

"I've seen a game in Maine at 9 a.m., New Hampshire at noon, Massachusetts at 5 p.m. and Rhode Island at 8:30 p.m. during the regional tournament season," he said.

"I've put 50,000 miles on the car this year."

Enos said he has no plans to slow down his pace. And while baseball has forced him to make compromises at home in Cohasset, it remains his "way of life."

He explained, "You have to have an understanding wife."

While his career kept him on the road for spans of two and three months, his wife Grace took care of their daughters Anne and Karyl.

Still, Enos said he has no regrets. "I'd do it all over again. Those old minor league ballparks with the rusty seats... I could spend my life in one of those ballparks."

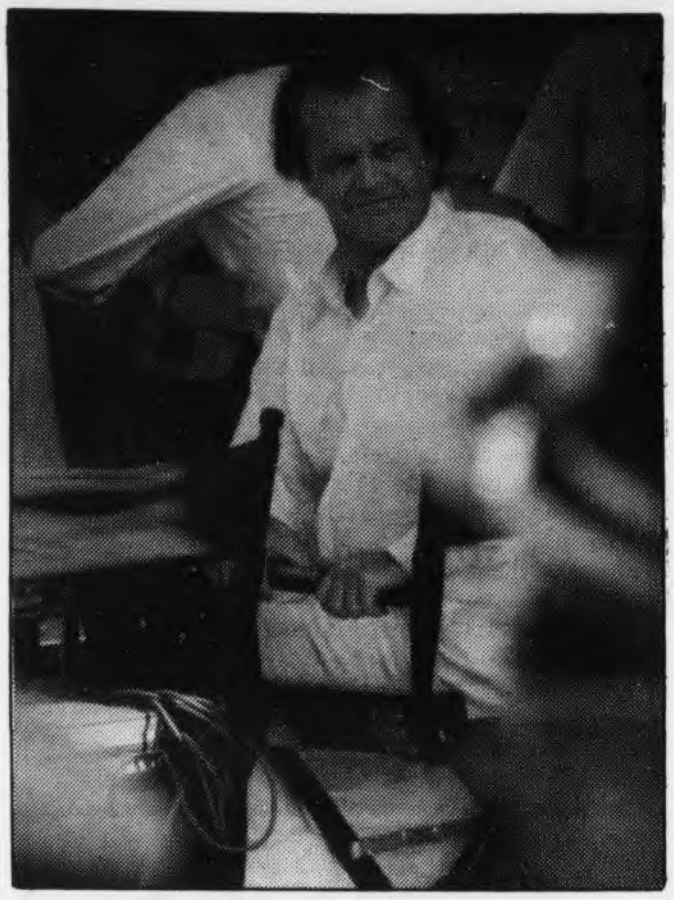
"I never knew a ball from a strike when I married him," Grace Enos said. "I learned fast."

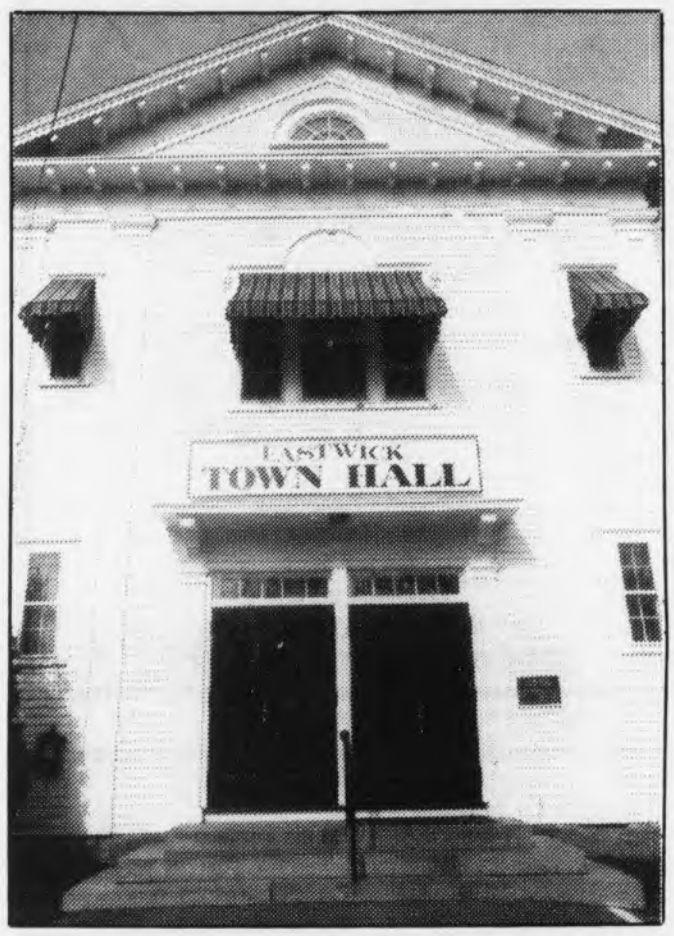
Now she attends games with her husband.

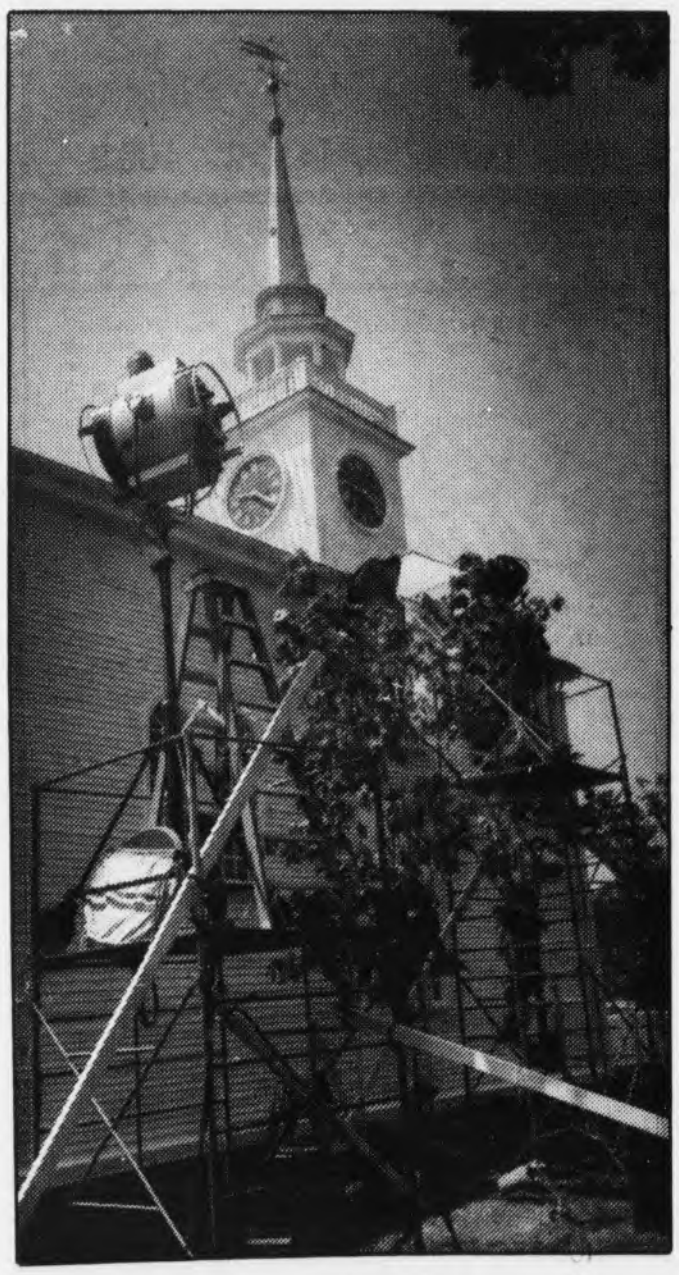
"She keeps track of the restaurants and motels," he commented. "She knows 'em all."

Wednesday, Bill Enos celebrated his 66th birthday. How?

He went to a baseball game.







'Witches' gets rave reviews

The famous actor was "always very up. He gave something to everybody. And I know now, when you're watching him on screen, you're watching the real Jack Nicholson. That's how he really is," she commented.

A final scene filmed Monday evening was a true Hollywood climax to the day's filming. It was a scene in which a huge wind machine duplicated the hurricane-force winds caused by one of the naughty witches. Leaves, papers and lawn chairs on a hardware delivery truck were strewn about Main Street as Nicholson raced into his black Mercedes and rushed out of town.

Dick and Sue Straley were left Tuesday morning with a store more reminiscent of a deli than a paper good and clothing store. But they have wonderful memories.

"They're our friends," Sue said about the cast and crew members of 'Witches.' I'll hate to see them go. We've made good friends."

The owner of The Red Balloon next door shares the sentiment.

"The highlight was really yesterday (Monday) with that wind machine," owner June Stonier said. "There was so much going on in the street yesterday. I just watched from here."

The previous week, the upstairs of The Red Balloon building was used in the film. "They filmed for two days up there. I'm still not sure if they'll be using the front window some more," she said, looking out at the stenciled name "The Eastwick Word" - the name of the fictious town's local newspaper.

"While we were closed for the two days, we kept busy. We did a lot of dusting!" she laughed, noting that the store's sign was also repainted during the respite.

"I didn't see the filming, but I could hear what was going on. At one point, I heard a gun go off, but we don't know how that fits into the scene," she smiled. "There was another scene in which the reporter is sitting outside on our back deck. It was really exciting to see how they recreate a sunny day. They even stapled geraniums to the side of the building to make it look outdoorsy."

"They're our friends," Sue Straley said about cast and crew members of 'Witches.' I'll hate to see them go. We've made good friends."

There will be some scenes in the movie Stonier will look for with special anticipation.

"There's a scene they shot yesterday where Nicholson's chauffer is out on the street. He's bouncing a bright red rubber ball. They bought that ball here -it's my favorite. And they also bought a yoyo, although I don't know when that will be in a scene," she noted.

For storeowner Straley, one of the nicest parts of Monday's filming came when the 'extra' actor stepped through her door for rehearsal. It was her friend from college, and Cohasset school teacher, Faith Bowker.

"That was terrific. I was so happy to see her," Straley said.

Bowker, who has been used as a movie extra for the past three weeks, portrayed a customer in the deli.

"I'm the number ahead of Nicholson," Bowker said during a break in the filming.

She then left the shop with her bag of groceries and walked back down South Main Street.

Wearing a long-sleeved demin dress and heels tied at the ankle, Bowker easily resembled a typically well-dressed Cohasset shopper. Her blond hair was pinned atop her head and she wore sunglasses.

"It's fun to be doing this right in Cohasset," the Osgood faculty member said as she walked past acquaintances and bystanders. "They make the extras feel so at ease. It's like a summer camp. We've gotten to know each other and we've all become friends."

When asked what Nicholson was doing in the deli between rehearsals and filming, Bowker replied, "he sings a lot. He's actually very casual. There's a lot of team work here on the set. There is no star quality about anyone I've met."

Bowker tried out for the part along with some friends. "We thought it would be fun. And it's been great - a great way to spend the summer!" she said.

First Parish

Summer Sunday Services: To provide an opportunity for quiet meditation, renewal of spirit and the sharing of fellowship, the Meeting House will be open every Sunday in August from 9 to 10 a.m. for informal services.

The leaders and their programs are: August 10, Bill and Betty Ripley, "A Family Gathers"; August 17, Shirley Tewksbury and Roger Whitley, "An Informal Sunday"; August 24, Anita Franks and Penny Redfield, "A Sense of Joy"; August 31, Bill and Gail Bell, "Sharing" II.

From the Minister's Study: As you may have heard, last week I was offered the opportunity to play the role of the minister in the Hollywood version of "The Witches of Eastwick." This role was not to be the philandering minister of John Updike's creation but a conventional clergyman conducting a service of worship in the Meeting House.

At first it sounded l'ke the chance of a lifetime to be "in the movies." After a conversation with our Parish Committee and some careful reflection, however, I decided to decline the offer. In recent weeks I have appeared over a dozen times on television, radio and in the newspapers speaking for our decision to permit the use of the Meeting House in the production of this controversial film. If, after accepting the role of an advocate of cooperation with Warner Bros. in filming a motion picture within our building I was to receive a part in the screen play, it might be inferred that my position had been self-serving.

I would have enjoyed being a star for a day, but I have also enjoyed the role of community spokesperson and I believe that it is essential to avoid even the appearance of a conflict of interest in playing that role. As previously planned I will serve as liaison between the First Parish and Warner Bros. during the fliming within the Meeting House. Compensation received from Warner Bros. for these services will be paid to the church.

Rev. Edward T. Atkinson
Minister

Parish News: With regret we note the death of Danforth Lincoln, a much beloved member of First Parish, a former treasurer, a longtime member of the choir and a member of the "famous 3 muskateers" Maintenance Committee who gave such devoted care to our buildings over a decade. A memorial service for Diff will be held in the fall.

Care Circle: The Care Circle is available for church members needs this summer. Call Carol Martin (6577) until August 8 and Joan Kovach (6358) for the rest of the summer. Requests are made through Gladys when the church office re-opens in September. Requests for meals or emergency child care or transportation are welcome.

As usual children are always welcome. Do you have stuffing material, gingham scraps, lace seam binding, yarn, rick rack, or good ideas? Bring them along Wednesday at 10 a.m.

Carillon recital Aug. 10

Linda Walker Pointer, Carillonneur from Clearwater, Florida, will perform a free recital on the 51-bell Jessie M. Barron Memorial Carillon at St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, 16 Highland Avenue, on Sunday, August 10 at 6 p.m.

Her program will include selections by Bach and Fernando Sor, as well as arrangements of songs of the "Gay Nineties".

Bring your lawn chairs, blankets, and picnic suppers to enjoy on Cohasset Common for this seventh recital of the summer series.

Village Fair collection begins

Mid-summer heat has not dampened the energies of workers for Cohasset's Village Fair, the five-church benefit that opens the Christmas season.

Planners for the bargain bazaar feature of the fair are appealing for donations, and have arranged for storage of items in the basement of St. Anthony's Rectory on South Main Street.

Members of the bargain bazaar committee will be on hand at the Rectory Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays from 10 a.m. to noon to accept donations.

"We're grateful to St. Anthony's for the privilege of being able to store donated articles in the basement of the rectory," states Gail Bell, who heads the bazaar, "and we want to cooperate by having people on hand to accept the donations and store them properly. So we're asking members of the five participating churches to search their cellars and attics for useful items and bring them to the rectory at the times when we have workers there. Feel free to call me at 740-1664 with any questions."

St. Anthony's is one of five town churches which join each year for this unique fund-raising effort. Other participating churches are the Second Congregational, First Parish Unitarian, St. Stephen's Episcopal, and Panagia Greek Orthodox.

Family story hours

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library invites school-age children and their parents to a Family Story Hour Monday, Aug. 11 at 7:30 p.m This is the last in a series of five evening programs for family enjoyment.

Ms. Elaine Weischedel, children's librarian from the Turner Free Library, Randolph, will once again bring her "Story Hat." This is a straw hat which has numerous items pinned to it. Weischedel will ask members of the audience to select "Story Hat" items about which she will then tell a story.

Weischedel first became interested in the art of storytelling as a librarian in the Wilmington, Delaware area, where she was also a member of the Wilmington Storytellers. She recently moved to the South Shore, where she has also become a member of the South Shore Storytellers.

Her program will last about 45 minutes.

Discussion on Cohasset Heights resumes Aug. 18

The board of health will meet August 18 with representatives of Cohasset Heights Ltd. to discuss the results of surface and ground water tests conducted there.

GHR, engineers for the commercial landfill, have placed well monitors throughout the property. Sample testing of the wells has been reported and is currently being reviewed by the health board members and their engineers, Camp, Dresser and McKee. Their comments on the monitoring results, which may determine the board's decision whether to allow the landfill to continue operation, will be discussed at the August 18 meeting.

In addition, monitoring of the state Department of Public Works (DPW) property has been completed by GHR. At this week's health board meeting, GHR engineers indicated there may be some degradation of the ground and surface water caused by the state DPW's activity in that vacinity.

Health board members have yet to see any data from that monitoring. According to Health Agent Joseph Godzik, "no one but the landfill people has seen those tests yet. But from what GHR said, there seems to be some indication that the ground water may be degraded by the DPW's activities. There's going to be a meeting between town officials, the landfill operators, GHR engineers and representatives of the Department of Environmental Quality Engineering, the Division of Solid Waste Management, the Division of Water Pollution Control and the DPW to discuss those findings," he said.

The DPW has stored road salt at the site adjacent to Cohasset Heights for many years. "The board of health asked them to clean up their act last year," Dr. Godzik recalled. "It's been a concern of the board for a while."

The financial bonding of the commercial landfill has been arranged by the operators, according to Dr. Godzik, although the health board "has nothing in hand at this moment." Bonding is needed by the town to insure against violation of the landfill activity, and to insure the town after the landfill has been abandoned. The post closure bonding will total $950,000 of liability insurance for the town and will include construction of a treatment facility at the landfill site.

Jimmy Fund Softball

The town officials of Scituate will play the Cohasset Town officials in a softball game designed to raise money for the Jimmy Fund, during August. Date and time will be announced next week.

Local merchants of Cohasset and Scituate will be sponsoring players. The $30 fee entitles the business to a team T-shirt with the business name on the back, and a donation to the Jimmy Fund. Ron Goodwin of Goodwin Graphics offered to donatee the shirts for Cohasset's team.

Any business, or individual for that matter, wishing to sponsor a player, (i.e., contribute to the Jimmy Fund), may call Jack Worley at The Cohasset Recreation Department, 383-6791, for further details. This should be done immediately

While sponsorship provides some capital for the Jimmy Fund, it is the attendance at the game that will provide the main source of revenue. The admission is free, however, a 'hat' will be passed for donations of any amount.

Cohasset management is still scouting for a Jim Lomborg "equalizer". Jim will be playing for the Scituate team. While there is no confirmation of the fact, it is suspected he will be pitching.

Rules for the ball game are specific and include such items as:

1. Players must be either elected or appointed town officials, department heads or supervisors.
2. Ten players will be on the field at all times, with the cumulative age of 450 years or more.
3. Free substitution will be allowed.
4. Professional and ex-professional athletes may be considered honorary town officials for that day.

Trask Tackle sponsors month-long blues tournament

By Jane Lane
Mariner Staff

Trask Tackle Co. has a sure-fire way to get rid of the blues.

The Cohasset-based company is sponsoring its first Bigfish Bluefish Tournament. The tournament officially began Aug. 1 at noon and will conclude Sept. 1 at noon.

As co-owner Mark Trask explained, "pound for pound, the bluefish is one of the finest small game fish, if not the finest in this area. It attacks bait and lures with a viciousness."

Trask noted, "the blues in this area leap out of the water and tail walk. And they have a serious set of teeth. Their nickname is 'choppers.' "

The blue, he noted, is not considered prime table fare. But, if cleaned and dressed out and iced quickly, the blue can be prepared in a variety of ways including barbequed, baked or broiled. "It's more in line with a mackerel. It's an oilier fish than most fish we eat in this area," Trask explained.

The tournament was specifically scheduled for late summer, Trask said, because this is the best time for the sportsman to find the blue.

"Generally the blue is found in June and July. This year it was even earlier. But this is the time when the activity for fishing peaks. They are feeding voraciously now. They're really aggressive because the bait it low."

The blue is a favorite catch of the sports fisherman.

"It's because of the fight," Trask said. "They can strip the line right off the reel. They are really a wild fish. They can drive schools of pogies and sperlings into the shore as they feed on them. Many people in this area have observed the bluefish blitz."

The Trask Tackle tournament is open to "anybody who likes to fish for blues from a boat or on shore. The blues can be caught anywhere."

The rules of the tournament specify the fish must be caught on a rod and reel. Registration forms for the tournament are available on local charter boats, at Trask Tackle shop, 827 Route 3A on the Cohasset/Scituate border, and at the Cohasset recreation department.

The forms must be completed and brought to Trask Tackle for official entry into the month-long competition.

All entries are eligible for Bigfish honors as well as weekly prizes and trophies. The official weigh station is located at the shop where all entries will be weighed Monday through Thursday from 9 a.m. to 7 p.m., Friday from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m., Saturday, 6 a.m. to 9 p.m., and Sunday, 6 a.m. to 7 p.m. To qualify for tournament competition, the fish must be weighed at Trask Tackle Co., so that all measurements are equal.

There are four mini-tournaments within the one Bigfish competition. The weekly tournaments will be from Aug. 1 through Aug. 9; Aug. 10 through Aug. 16; Aug. 17 through Aug. 23; and Aug. 24 through Sept. 1. Prizes will be awarded weekly.

The Bigfish grand prize will be awarded Sept. 1. First place will be a trophy cup and a $100 gift certificate.

Trask described the Bigfish contest as a competition for the largest fish. "It is not a quantitative contest," he said. "We don't care about the number of fish caught, but the size of the fish. The fish will be measured by length, weight, and girth."

The weight and girth of the fish will be multiplied by the length of the blue. For instance, a 30.5 lb. fish is multiplied by the length of 18 inches, multiplied by the girth of 19.25 for a total of 10,568. 25 points.

Weekly prizes for the four largest fish will be awarded for the fish caught in the respective week only. All fish are eligible for the grand prize Bigfish contest.

"This is a first-time tourney for us," Trask explained. "We're hoping for a big turnout. It adds some type of organized, competitive atmosphere to the whole business of catching fish. It adds a sense of purpose to the sport.

"The contest is open to anybody," he continued. "Anybody who likes to fish for blues is welcome to participate. The fish can be caught anywhere, on shore or on a boat."

For more information on the Trask Tackle Company Bigfish Tournament, contact the shop at 383-0061.

Science Center news notes

Sea stars, sea urchins, fish, sand eels, crabs and sand dollars. These are just a few of the things to be looking for and learning about during Marine Adventure Week, August 11 through 15. Marshfield's Fair opens activities August 13

By Marilyn Jackson
Mariner Staff

Workers from Dean and Flynn Fiesta Shows have assembled rides and amusements, and horsemen have been exercising their horses for several days as last minute preparations are completed for the 119th annual Marshfield Fair.

The fair opens next week, Aug. 13, and will run for 12 days through Aug. 24.

A highlight of this year's fair will be the annual Plymouth County 4-H fair, held in Marshfield for the first time. It will include a wide-ranging assortment of 4-H exhibits.

The first fair was simply an agricultural exhibit sponsored by the South Marshfield Farmers' Club. The group formally became the Marshfield Agricultural and Horticultural Society in 1867 and has been sponsoring the fair continuously except for one year during World War II.

The 4-Hers, volunteers and county agents will conduct tours of the 4-H barns to give fairgoers an opportunity to hear from youngsters themselves about what's involved in raising animals — poultry, sheep, beef and swine.

Many of the entries for arts and crafts, needlecraft, home furnishings and clothing must be submitted this weekend between 10 a.m. and 4 p.m. Saturday and between 1 and 4 p.m. Sunday at the Exhibition Hall.

And, according to Fran Svelnis, chairman of the country art committee, there will be a craft shop where exhibitors can also sell their wares. "It's the only one like it at any fair," Svelnis said.

Two "perishable" competitions, the men only bakeoff will be held Aug. 16, and entries must be submitted between 8 and 9 a.m., while the annual chocolate day will be held on the last day of the fair. Entries which may include any food made with some form of chocolate, must include the recipe and be submitted between 9 and 10 a.m. Aug. 24.

Amateur florists must enter their garden flowers Aug. 12, while professional florists submit their arrangements Aug. 20. Fruit and vegetables must be submitted next Tuesday.

The 4-H livestock program has a set schedule, and between 4 and 8 p.m. next Tuesday, the animals arrive. On the first day of the fair, swine, dairy and beef will be exhibited, while other exhibits of goats, rabbits, sheep, dogs will be shown later in the week.

The awards program is held at 7:30 p.m. Aug. 23.

According to fair officials, the fair is running two extra days to accommodate the 4-H fair. The two extra days also means two more days of pari-mutuel horse racing.

With the extra racing dates and an improved racetrack along with new wagering machines, an even bigger racing handle is expected.

But it will be the weather that determines the turnout. Last year's fair averaged a record daily handle of $432,728.

The track itself has been completely resurfaced, the turns have been banked and a new inside rail has been built. Purses have been increased to a $2,150 minium, with $2,250 for a featured event. A daily double on the first two races will be held, and perfectas on the third, fifth and ninth events. There will be no racing on Sundays.

Studds reports on insurance law

Congressman Gerry Studds issued the following progress report this week on his drive to improve insurance laws for the commerical fisherman.

" Last week, the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries approved what I consider to be the most important piece of fisheries-related legislation since enactment of the 200-mile limit a decade ago.

"The bill—which I helped draft—responds effectively and equitably to a crisis in insurance that has made it economically difficult—and in some cases impossible—for commerical fishermen to operate in any major fishery in the United States. The bill would establish a system for compensating injured fishermen that will create the increased stability and predictability required by the insurance industry, but which will be fair, as well, both to boatowners and to crew.

" The bill also imposes new requirements to increase the construction and operating safety of fishing vessels. These provisions were developed in response to Coast Guard testimony that indicated that commercial fishing is now the most dangerous industrial occupation in the United States. The improved safety conditions that should result from passage of the bill are needed both to save lives and to improve the ability of commercial fishermen to purchase sufficient insurance at an affordable price.

"Committee action on the bill came after eighteen months of hearings and meetings held around the country to gather information concerning the effect of the insurance crisis on the fishing industry. It is well known that the liability insurance industry, in general, is undergoing a period of major readjustment resulting from changing economic conditions, and from the industry's perception that settlements in liability cases have grown too rapidly in recent years.

"Earlier this year, the Justice Department released a study recommending a series of changes in tort liability law for the purpose of easing the insurance crisis as it affects the needs of municipalities, doctors, midwives, restaurants and other entities. That study did not, however, make any mention of the particular problems being faced by the fishing industry, nor would legislation that has been introduced to deal with the general insurance crisis have any effect on the problems facing commercial fishermen.

"For this reason, the insurance crisis for fishermen must be dealt with separately; and because of the severity of that problem, it must be dealt with soon.

"I was very pleased by our victory this past week within the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and I will be working to see that further legislative progress on this issue is achieved in the near future."

World of Weather: Satellites aid forecasting

Forecasting the weather accurately is very difficult in spite of modern technology. Satellite pictures, radar, and computers still can't always outguess Mother Nature but they are heavily relied upon by today's meteorologists.

May 4, 1986, a Geostationary Operational Environmental Satellite, or GOES weather satellite, was destroyed during an aborted rocket launch. This satellite would have provided a continuous source of weather pictures of the Atlantic region in time to observe storms developing there during this year's hurricane season.

Normally, two satellites are in orbit, with one stationed over the East Coast and one over the West Coast.

But the failure of the GOES (East) satellite two years ago meant that the single remaining satellite had to be repositioned in a central location, providing only limited coverage of both coasts.

What if this satellite, orbiting 23,000 miles in space, experienced an unexpected failure? The weathermen would lose their eye in the sky, their colorful TV displays, and a valuable link in the chain of meteorological weaponry. Did you ever wonder what the "old time weathermen" did without satellites?

Back in the 1940s and 1950s, weather ships were key observation outposts that radioed data to forecasters ashore, as they battled shrieking storms that roamed the wintry North Atlantic. The vessels also served as rescue ships as they kept constantly on the move in their 210 square mile patrol areas.

The ocean-station network was first formed during World War II to aid thousands of allied warplanes crossing the North Atlantic, in the event of an ocean landing, and to provide data crucial to making weather forecasts for landing fields in the British Isles; also for bombing missions over Europe. Storms move from west to east and forecasters had to know what was happening over the open sea. This meant that ships had to be scattered across the vast expanse of the Atlantic.

At the end of the war, the weather ships discounted their operations. But many meteorologists and scientists felt that the project should resume. Sept.

17, 1946, representatives of several nations met in London and reached an agreement to establish a network of ocean weather stations in the North Atlantic.

The U.S. Coast Guard manned 21 cutters, 17 of them converted Navy seaplane tenders, as they patrolled four stations. Ships of Great Britain, the Netherlands, France, Sweden and Norway covered five other ocean stations. One area that the U.S. was assigned was Ocean Station Bravo, a 210-mile square in the tumultous storm track between Newfoundland and Greenland.

Three weeks at sea, in the winter, aboard a 311 foot, 2,592-tonvessel was miserable at best. Buffeted by hurricane force winds and sixty foot seas, life was a constant fight for survival. The ship's worst enemy was rime ice. Covered in frozen spray, a ship becomes top heavy and hard to handle. In towering seas, when a ship may roll 60 degrees, this added weight brings danger of capsizing. The crew, exposed to the brutal elements, would have to go on deck with axes, hammers and picks to clear the topside ice build-up.

Below decks, life was warm but uncomfortable. As the ship's bow jolted skyward you would be immobilized, then as the wave passed under the hull, the bow would plunge into the trough of another mountainous wave with the sensation of weightlessness.

As the bow dug deep into the rolling sea, the vessel would shudder, almost stopping forward progress, then with spray flying, the process would continue.

Meals were a juggling act and showers near impossible. Yet the men would continue their duties. The meteorologists would send helium filled balloons aloft trailing a radiosonde and radar reflector. A "radiosonde" is an instrument which measures the temperature, pressure, humidity and winds at various heights above the sea (or ground). It has a radio transmitter that relays information back until it reaches an altitude of about 17 miles when "balloon burst" occurs. At sea it is lost, but over land a parachute opens and the instrument package is often recovered.

In October, 1947, the cutter George M. Bibb, operating in another area assigned to the U.S., accomplished a dramatic rescue. The cutter was positioned in station Charlie, 840 miles off the Newfoundland coast, when the flying boat Bermuda Sky Queen was forced to land in heavy seas after running out of fuel on a flight from Ireland. The plane had battled strong head winds and its captain decided to ditch near the weather ship. The pilot landed in the storm-tossed seas within three miles of the cutter.

It took the Coast Guard men 24 hours to rescue all 69 persons aboard the downed aircraft. The brave crew of the weather ship shuttled back and forth in 30-foot seas, bringing as many as 16 passengers at a time back to the safety of the Bibb. Shortly after the rescue was completed, the doomed plane slid beneath the surface to a watery grave. This celebrated rescue lives on in the annals of Coast Guard history.

The weather ships, with masts bristling with radar antennas and other complex equipment, provided on site information. We now have weather buoys located at sea, but you can't expect a buoy to do a man's job (or a satellite's).

'Suitehearts' poses several mysteries to ponder

THEATRE REVIEW

By Judith Montminy
Special to the Mariner

"Suitehearts," the latest offering by Christo's II and Darling Productions is a mystery, but the answers escape me.

Why was the play (sic) chosen in the first place?

Why was it allowed by director David Mansfield to last over two hours on a set that presents unnecessary physical hazards to the actors? Why wasn't some of the more aimless dialogue cut?

Just when viewers at our table of ten were sure the play was about to reach a conclusion (and sighed with relief), a new piece of dialogue prolonged the ordeal.

Whatever happened to the good old comedic formula "boy meets girl-boy loses girl-boy gets girl"?

The formula used in "Suitehearts" seems to be "boy has girl-boy loses girl-boy meets girl-boy gets girl-boy loses girl-boy gets girl" ad nauseum.

The theory behind the selection of "Suitehearts" must be that prolonged talk about first-time sex on a wedding night, aghast glances through "The Joy of Sex" manual and push-up brassieres are enough.

They're not.

Try to imagine "Revenge of the Nerds Takes a Honeymoon" meeting "The Days of Whine and Roses" and you will have a fair idea of what it was like sitting through "Suitehearts."

The play takes place in a New York hotel honeymoon suite. Two couples have been given keys to the same room. One couple is inexperienced, naive and embarrassed to talk about, let alone "do it."

The other couple is crass, experienced and macho in a heart-of-gold-underneath-it-all sort of way. Lines such as, "I had to marry her" (to get the audience to think the floosy girlfriend was pregnant) are followed by "She was almost forty." Hilarious stuff? Hardly. Perhaps mildly cute in a one-act play, but deadly in a two hour plus production.

George Stevens, executive producer of Darling Productions, told the audience that "Suitehearts" was having its New England premiere at Christo's II. Say what you will about good old Yankee intuition, but it has proven to be right on-target as others have passed over the play in the Samual French catalogue and have chosen not to produce it in New England.

Mention should be made of the cast (Greg Foster, Meredith Wood, Eric Joseph, Carl Slotnik and Juliet David) because it is hard for any actor to sustain a one-note whine and no character development throughout a play.

Limited by the inanity of the script, it is unfair to judge how these actors might do in a better play with dialogue that doesn't make them, and the audience, wince.

Perhaps the best visual moment in the play comes when the nerd-y husband, Timothy, dons a colorful Hawaiian moo-moo. At least costume offers a change of pace — something the play as a whole never does.

ZBA sends Harmony Hill developers back to square one

By John Magadieu
Mariner Staff

The zoning board of appeals sent the developers of Harmony Hill back to square one in their pursuit to expand the Beechwood Street project.

"Nearly two years ago this month," ArthurRoberts said Thursday night, "we came before the board for a special permit to convert the rundown Harmony Hill into five condominiums.

"The project is now complete," he added, "and virtually sold. I hope that it's met with the approval of the town."

At the time the board approved Roberts' special permit, the board and the public raised two concerns.

First, they did not want to see the driveway extend to an area known as "the backland."

Also, they did not want to see the one-acre back lot "used for construction purposes," Roberts recalled.

"Tonight," he announced, "we are here to ask the board to amend our special permit and allow us to build a triplex on the back acre lot."

He explained the proposed new structure would be "entirely in keeping with the existing structure."

Architect Ralph LeBlanc added, "It will be the same style as the existing building, victorian with a tower.

"It will be modified somewhat," he said, "but the tower will give it the feeling of the Victorian era."

Roberts added, "All three units will have outdoor space; two will have decks and there will be a patio on the lower level.

"No permanent parking would be visible from the street," he said, "and exterior lighting would be minimized."

He acknowledged, "Practically speaking, the ZBA must be concerned with density and the neighborhood impact.

"Our original work last year," he said, "has helped to escalate values of the area; we have condominiums selling for $300,000. And it has added nearly $15,000 to the tax rolls."

He added, "Due to the small number of units, the traffic situation on Beechwood Street really hasn't been affected by our buildings."

Next, Roberts offered the ZBA a deal.

"As you know," he told the board, "land in Cohasset is at a premium. We are prepared at this time, along with this application, to enter into an agreement with the board of appeals to place at the disposal of the new building project an additional acre of land behind that."

He explained, "This would come out of the back of the houses that we own; and that would be used and completed as a pastoral park for our condominium lot."

The ZBA didn't bite.

"I have a question about your application," Chairman Myrna Putziger said. "Your letter requests amendment of a special permit. . . ."

"Right," Roberts replied.

"I guess I want you to help me understand why you think the construction of a new structure would be allowed by an amendment to a special permit," she said.

He explained, "Our counsel suggested we go this way because it was in our original special permit application."

Putziger responded, "As I recall, your original application subdivided the land; it created a building lot. And it relates to the parcel on which the existing building stands."

"Correct," he said.

"I don't believe your original application allowed for the construction of a three-family dwelling," she said. "It's not permitted by our town bylaws. You would need a variance."

"The original dwelling is a five-family home," Roberts retorted.

"But that was converted from a building that existed before," she shot back.

"Well, we decided to convert more land into that particular project," he said.

"You need a variance, not an amendment to a special permit."

Putziger suggested Roberts try to prove hardship to get the variance. The hearing will be continued September 4.

The ZBA must make a decisioin on Roberts' plan by October 29.

In other action, the ZBA met with Walter Sullivan, an attorney representing Jim Gilmour of 51 Jerusalem Road.

Gilmour is challenging the ZBA disapproval of his site plan.

Before Sullivan and the board broke into a closed executive session to discuss the pending litigation between them, Sullivan presented to the public changes to the plan which brought about the dispute.

First though, attorney John Roy, representing the abutters, challenged the validity of the meeting.

"I object to this procedure," he shouted. "There is no application pending here."

Putziger said, "We are within our rights to discuss pending litigation in private; this public presentation is a courtesy.

"This isn't a public hearing," she explained. "We're just getting information about this plan, so we can discuss whether we want to fight to the death or consider a proposal for an alternative solution."

Sullivan explained, at a recent pre-trial conference, the judge inquired whether the architect and engineer could make modifications to the plan to bring the building more into conformity with what the board would allow.

"That's the reason we're here tonight," he said.

"In your decision," he recalled, "the board made certain observations concerning the increased nonconformity of the building; the overhangs; the percentage increase of floor area; the number of stories.

"These new plans have been submitted to the board," he said. "Possibly, they eliminate all of those things.

"Indeed," he said, "there is no overhang.

"Indeed, the percentage of the floor area has been cut back significantly.

"Indeed, there is no greater encroachment on setbacks than existed in the prior structure."

Trying to smooth out past wrinkles, Sullivan said, "When we came before this board previously, it was an urgent situation; we were responding to the revocation of the permit."

Specific plan changes included the removal of the ground floor walls, so the house looks like it's supported by pillars. This was an effort to keep the ZBA from considering that area a "story."

Also, a portion of the top floor was removed and replaced with a sun deck, to avoid being considered a room.

Furthermore, the roof was lowered, so the house would show two stories, rather than two-and-a-half.

The only element unchanged was parking.

"There's no room for increased parking," Sullivan said. "If special permit criteria applied, this would be an apt candidate for the exception."

He added, the Appeals Court could find no cross-reference to help it decide whether special permit criteria should be applied to non-conforming structures.

He explained the proposed new structure would be "entirely in keeping with the existing structure."

Architect Ralph LeBlanc added, "It will be the same style as the existing building, victorian with a tower.

"It will be modified somewhat," he said, "but the tower will give it the feeling of the Victorian era."

Roberts added, "All three units will have outdoor space; two will have decks and there will be a patio on the lower level.

"No permanent parking would be visible from the street," he said, "and exterior lighting would be minimized."

He acknowledged, "Practically speaking, the ZBA must be concerned with density and the neighborhood impact.

"Our original work last year," he said, "has helped to escalate values of the area; we have condominiums selling for $300,000. And it has added nearly $15,000 to the tax rolls."

He added, "Due to the small number of units, the traffic situation on Beechwood Street really hasn't been affected by our buildings."

Next, Roberts offered the ZBA a deal.

"As you know," he told the board, "land in Cohasset is at a premium. We are prepared at this time, along with this application, to enter into an agreement with the board of appeals to place at the disposal of the new building project an additional acre of land behind that."

He explained, "This would come out of the back of the houses that we own; and that would be used and completed as a pastoral park for our condominium lot."

The ZBA didn't bite.

"I have a question about your application," Chairman Myrna Putziger said. "Your letter requests amendment of a special permit. . . ."

"Right," Roberts replied.

"I guess I want you to help me understand why you think the construction of a new structure would be allowed by an amendment to a special permit," she said.

He explained, "Our counsel suggested we go this way because it was in our original special permit application."

Putziger responded, "As I recall, your original application subdivided the land; it created a building lot. And it relates to the parcel on which the existing building stands."

"Correct," he said.

"I don't believe your original application allowed for the construction of a three-family dwelling," she said. "It's not permitted by our town bylaws. You would need a variance."

"The original dwelling is a five-family home," Roberts retorted.

"But that was converted from a building that existed before," she shot back.

"Well, we decided to convert more land into that particular project," he said.

"You need a variance, not an amendment to a special permit."

Putziger suggested Roberts try to prove hardship to get the variance. The hearing will be continued September 4.

The ZBA must make a decisioin on Roberts' plan by October 29.

In other action, the ZBA met with Walter Sullivan, an attorney representing Jim Gilmour of 51 Jerusalem Road.

Gilmour is challenging the ZBA disapproval of his site plan.

Before Sullivan and the board broke into a closed executive session to discuss the pending litigation between them, Sullivan presented to the public changes to the plan which brought about the dispute.

First though, attorney John Roy, representing the abutters, challenged the validity of the meeting.

"I object to this procedure," he shouted. "There is no application pending here."

Putziger said, "We are within our rights to discuss pending litigation in private; this public presentation is a courtesy.

"This isn't a public hearing," she explained. "We're just getting information about this plan, so we can discuss whether we want to fight to the death or consider a proposal for an alternative solution."

Sullivan explained, at a recent pre-trial conference, the judge inquired whether the architect and engineer could make modifications to the plan to bring the building more into conformity with what the board would allow.

"That's the reason we're here tonight," he said.

"In your decision," he recalled, "the board made certain observations concerning the increased nonconformity of the building; the overhangs; the percentage increase of floor area; the number of stories.

"These new plans have been submitted to the board," he said. "Possibly, they eliminate all of those things.

"Indeed," he said, "there is no overhang.

"Indeed, the percentage of the floor area has been cut back significantly.

"Indeed, there is no greater encroachment on setbacks than existed in the prior structure."

Trying to smooth out past wrinkles, Sullivan said, "When we came before this board previously, it was an urgent situation; we were responding to the revocation of the permit."

Specific plan changes included the removal of the ground floor walls, so the house looks like it's supported by pillars. This was an effort to keep the ZBA from considering that area a "story."

Also, a portion of the top floor was removed and replaced with a sun deck, to avoid being considered a room.

Furthermore, the roof was lowered, so the house would show two stories, rather than two-and-a-half.

The only element unchanged was parking.

"There's no room for increased parking," Sullivan said. "If special permit criteria applied, this would be an apt candidate for the exception."

He added, the Appeals Court could find no cross-reference to help it decide whether special permit criteria should be applied to non-conforming structures.

Politicus — by David A. Mittell, Jr.

The Westfield State scandal: A fiduciary view

For the last several months a putative scandal has been a-brewing at Westfield State College. No doubt the reader has heard about it since the misconduct that is alleged is of a sexual variety. Hating to be a wet blanket when the possibility exists of a juicy scandal on the British model, I must nevertheless insist that, as the great political commentatrix the late Talulah Bankhead said, "There is much less there than meets the eye!"

The facts of the case are this. The president of the college, Francis J. Pilecki, has been accused of having or seeking to have sex with one or more male undergraduates. Some sources put the number as high as 22. The mother of one of the alleged victims brought the matter to the attention of college officials, who at first, apparently, doubted her story.

But the woman persisted, contacted her state representative, and eventually made her case sufficiently credible that the college assented to an out-of-court settlement. Under the agreement approved by the state Board of Regents and executed by the college's trustees, the student would receive three semester's free tuition—the agreement cited "inadequate educational experience"—and $10,000 in cash. In return, the family agreed to keep the matter confidential. As to President Pilecki, he denied the charges against him but quickly agreed to resign as of September, 1986. He would collect his full salary until that time.

This settlement, which was approved by officials in Atty. General Bellotti's office as well as by the regents and the trustees, has been criticized on several scores. People want to know why Pilecki has continued to be paid. People—especially Republican people such as state Republican Chairman/candidate for Auditor Rep. Andrew Natsios—want to know what role the Dukakis administration has played in covering up a scandal that took place under its aegis and during its watch.

I strongly suppose that all the above-mentioned parties to the settlement with the student and his feisty mother did try to cover up the whole nasty business. To that I say "good for them," for there are worse things than the cover-up of an embarrassing scandal—for instance the destruction of a fine institution.

From the fiduciary point of view, that is to say from the point of view of the trustee whose duty it is to assure the survival and well-being of the institution, the fire of a nasty scandal has to get doused before an injury is done to the institution and to all who stand to benefit from it on into the indefinite future. Trustees, who today sometimes have to carry insurance on themselves in the event they are personally sued by a party with a grievance against the institution on whose board they serve, are fully aware that in this litigious age losing a major lawsuit can destroy a small college like Westfield State. Hell, lawyers' costs today are such that many small institutions can't afford to win a major lawsuit.

That being the case, when a scandal erupts college trustees have no choice but to act in a way that may seem a bit Nixonian to the uninitiated. If, for instance, the facts of a potential scandal indicate that a faculty member or other authority figure has assaulted a student, the authority figure must be gotten off campus quickly and if possible quietly. If it takes a resignation according to which the authority figure continues to be paid for a while and is allowed to retire in good standing, that may be preferable to a public scandal that could undermine a small school's morale, its admissions, and its general functioning for an indefinite period.

Equally important is to satisfy the grievance of the student and his family. If this can be done expeditiously and without a costly, lengthy public lawsuit, it is so much the better for the institution. In the Westfield case, trustees agreed to a relatively modest cash settlement in return for settling the matter confidentially and out-of-court. In fact, Westfield State got off easily, and the trustees of the college should be credited with the highest form of service to their institution.

Instead they are accused of a "cover-up" by the press and by politicians who don't understand the meaning of "fiduciary responsibility." Big institutions such as Harvard and the Boston Globe can survive their scandals and defend their lawsuits. But small institutions like Westfield State College cannot, and whether one agrees entirely with the way officials handled this particular unfortunate episode, one ought to appreciate that the intent here was to serve the well-being of the institution. In my view, if the victim and his family have been satisfied, if the alleged victimizer has been permanently removed, and if both have been accomplished without litigation, then school officials should be saluted for the excellence of their service.

One wonders, in fact, what more our critics would want revealed. A detailed statement of the particulars of the alleged sins of an obviously troubled retiring president? The names of the alleged victims? The names of those who might have blown the whistle sooner? What on earth would be the purpose in revealing such information at this juncture?

In my view there are just two questions that still need to be answered. First, was it proper to allow the retiring president to leave without in some way alerting future employers to the nature of his alleged misconduct at Westfield? Secondly, as Rep. Natsios has asked, has the fact that the aggrieved student was nominally paid off for "inadequate educational experience" created a precedent that could produce a raft of future claims on the basis of that vague phrase?

Those questions should be answered in due course. On the large question of the handling of this nasty, unfortunate scandal, I believe the trustees and the regents should get a "good grade." When one considers the alternative—the spectacle of a long, costly lawsuit in which a small college plays the role of Claus Von Bulow for six months or a year—I don't see how we can grade them otherwise.

Revelling in a sense of garden accomplishment

This is what it's all about — all that planting, hoeing and weeding is paying off and gardeners are revelling in their sense of accomplishment in growing hundreds of pounds of veggies from a few ounces of seeds.

If you have a bumper crop of zucchini, here is a recipe for a traditional Italian sauce to enjoy over spaghetti, in soups or on fresh vegetables.

PESTO

1 c. ea. fresh basil leaves and parsley
3 cloves garlic
1/2 c. olive oil
1 c. grated Parmesan cheese
1/3 c. pine nuts or walnuts

Place basil, parsley and garlic in blender, or use a mortar and pestle. Blend with 1/4 c. olive oil on low speed. Add cheese and remaining oil and blend. Add nuts, blending until chopped. Store in refrigerator. May be frozen.

Lucky indeed the gardener who has the space to grow corn, for each year it goes up in price and one roadside stand was asking $3.50 a dozen the other day. When picked, corn loses its sweet flavor rapidly and should be eaten no more than 30 minutes after ears are pulled. Some like corn garnished with a little chopped pimiento or minced green pepper, but who could ask for more than a freshly picked ear dripping with butter. Eggplants make an excellent substitute. I'd pass up a sirloin steak any day for a serving of this classic

RATATOUILLE

In a heavy casserole saute 2 thinly sliced onions and 2 cloves of garlic (minced) in 1/4 c. olive oil. Add 1 large cubed eggplant, 4 chunked zucchini, 4 thinly sliced green peppers, 4 peeled and quartered tomatoes. Place in casserole, cover and simmer or bake at 375 for 40 min. Uncover and cook 10 min. longer to reduce liquid. Serve with freshly grated Parmesan cheese and crusty French bread.

Last month when Barbara Carney of the Doric Dames asked me to review their new cookbook, I gamely made a stab at singling out a few recipes for this column so that you might get an idea of how very special this book is. "Bulfinch's Boston Faire, Past and Present," prepared by these volunteer guides at our State House has since been selected by Yankee Magazine as their Cookbook of the Month and I thought you'd be interested to know that among the Doric Dames working on the book are these women of the South Shore: Mrs. Mary Bailey Moore of Scituate, Mrs. Robert J. Kemp of Norwell, Mrs. John R. MacSwan of Weymouth, and Mrs. Carney of Marshfield. From Hingham are members: Mrs. William A. Gray III, Mrs. Edmund Fitzmaurice, Mrs. Leonard Johnson, Mrs. A.P. Hutchinson Jr. and Mrs. Drew Bennett. Cohasset committee members are Mrs. John M. Bleakie, Mrs. John Hitt, Mrs. Arthur W. Johnson and Mrs. N. Frank Neere Jr.

Gardeners have the edge in maintaining good health, as fruits and vegetables are superb sources of the two critical vitamins, A and C. Chock-full of vitamins is this

MINT CUCUMBER SOUP

2 medium cukes
1 c. buttermilk
1/4 c. minced fresh parsley
2 tsp. fresh chives
1½ tsp. minced fresh dill
6 fresh mint leaves
1/4 tsp. minced fresh tarragon
2 tsp. lemon juice
1½ c. low-fat yogurt

Peel cukes, cut in half lengthwise. Scoop out seeds and cut into chunks. Place all ingredients except yogurt in blender. Blend at high speed until finely chopped. Transfer to a bowl. Whisk in yogurt and chill before serving. Serves 4.

This morning's mail brought an invitation to the 160th birthday celebration of the Union Oyster House, the oldest restaurant in continuous service in the U.S. An all-day celebration will be held today at 41 Union St., Boston and at 7:30 p.m. at Boston City Hall Plaza, there will be a free musical celebration. It's fascinating to read their history since their opening. In 1796, Louis Philippe, a future King of France lived on the 2nd floor. It was at the Oyster Bar that the famous statesman and summer resident of Marshfield, Daniel Webster, daily drank his tall tumbler of brandy and water, with each half-dozen oysters, seldom having less than six plates. Among notables in their autograph book are: Paul Newman, Sir Lawrence Olivier, Larry Bird, Bobby Orr, Helen Hayes and V.P. George Bush.

THE DRAGON'S DUNGEON — By CLAIRE McDONOUGH

In the garden of my mind

"I really miss having a vegetable garden this year," I told the Dragon. "There's nothing in the world like picking your own fresh lettuce and tomatoes just before you make a salad."

He looked sympathetic. "I know you like the idea of a garden. But be honest. When did you ever have a vegetable garden that was an unqualified success?"

I thought for a minute. "1967. That was the year we had just the right amount of rain and sun. Everything came up beautifully.

He nodded. "It certainly did. And it came up even better for our neighbors. As I recall, that was the year everyone on Third Cliff was roaming around with baskets full of vegetables trying to give them away. You even gave serious consideration to going to Boston and forcing the street people to take zucchini. At gunpoint."

"You exaggerate," I told him. "If memory doesn't fail me I preserved many of those vegetables. I had jars of corn and tomatoes and beets and green beans and carrots and pickles and ketchup. It was a wonderful feeling to know that I could feed my family vegetables all winter with the produce from my garden that I had 'put up' in mason jars. It made me feel like a Woman of Kent, sort of."

He sighed. "I remember. That was the year we ate Campbell's soup and pizza for a week because everything came ripe at the same time and you didn't have time to do anything but can. And wash Breida's diapers, because she was the baby that year. The rest of us kept wandering around trying to find clean underwear and socks and looking for something to eat."

"That," I told him, "was because it was before the revolution. Now I hope you'd have enough sense to wash your own underwear and socks. And you're perfectly capable of cooking yourself a meal."

"Not if every burner on the stove has vegetables canning on it. And if you'll press your memory a little harder, you might recall that no one in the family eats beets except you and me. And 56 large mason jars is a little much even for us. The corn and tomato sauce and stuff would have been nice if a cat hadn't knocked most of the jars off the shelf and broken them. Then at Thanksgiving when there was a drive to feed the poor, you gave them everything that the cat didn't break. Except for the beets, because you reasoned that if our kids wouldn't eat beets, probably no one else would, either.

"Face it, Claire. Gardening is not one of your strengths. During the winter months you plan a perfect garden. In the spring you get the boys to turn over the soil, and you plant enough vegetables to save Ethiopia and the Dust Bowl. During May and June you carefully seed, cultivate and fertilize.

"Somewhere in July you start to lose interest, and by August it's Weed City.

"One of Breida's cats chased a mouse into your garden last summer and neither has been seen since. There's a rumor that Something That Eats Small Animals lives in the eggplant-skunk cabbage bed."

"So I don't like to weed," I admitted. "Do you have any better ideas? I refuse to abandon the concept of myself as a Nurturer of the Hungry."

"Now that you mention it, I do," he replied. "Why don't you limit yourself to the part you always do well? The planning.

"Has it ever occurred to you that there are no weeds in the garden of your brain?"

"No," I snapped. "I'm too busy thinking of the splinters in the windmills of your mind. What on earth are you talking about?"

He sighed patiently. "Look. You tell me you're into aerobic sleeping. You dream the exercises and wait for the results. Why not just plan your garden? Our neighbors will love you because you'll be available to take their surplus vegetables off their hands, and if you need more you can always buy wonderful things at Mrs. Prouty's stand.

"And whenever you have the urge to till the soil, pull a few weeds, or harvest the crops you can do it mentally. You can still be a Woman of Kent in the privacy of you own mind."

"Not a bad idea," I said. I took my car keys from the hook and planted a kiss on his forehead.

"Where are you going." he asked. "You didn't fix lunch yet."

"Yes I did," I smiled sweetly. "I just mentally made you chicken cordon bleu and a chocolate torte. I suggest you pretend you're eating it."

From the garden

by Joan Pinkham

Summer is on the wane in August

With the sun in the morning and the moon at night, flowers and vegetables to admire and pick, shady trees and sunny beaches, life on the South Shore has much to offer in the heart of our summer season.

But visitors who glimpse our way of life may not be aware of the fact that it doesn't all just happen. Take August for instance. One awakens to a day that can be either foggy, muggy or buggy, but whether it turns too hot or clammy from the east wind off the ocean, garden chores await.

It's time to plant seeds again, both flowers and vegetables. Pansies, columbine and English daisies do well because the soil is warm. As soon as one crop is finished in the vegetable garden, another goes in its place. Cool weather crops thrive when planted in August and are ripe in late September and early October.

Lest the gardener has dreams of swinging in a hammock, the calendar reminds us that this is also a time to: cut and dry herbs in a cool, airy, shaded place . . . chop up cornstalks after the ears are harvested, for the stalks are a rich addition to the compost pile; take cuttings of healthy geraniums, coleus, impatience and root them in damp sand . . . stake late-blooming perennials, including asters, chrysanthemums and other tall plants.

Sad to say, summer is on the wane in August. The length of days shortens by almost an hour in this, the month of the Sturgeon Moon and, incredible though it may seem, the fall bird migration has already begun. As Beverly Litchfield says of the birds she knows so well: "They came, they nested . . . they're leaving." The beaches are flooded with birds who flock to rest and feed before resuming their trek south. Even the warblers are coming down from the north and some birds are in their fall plummage. For what could be a last glimpse of these shore birds, you are invited to join in the South Shore Bird Club's trip to Plum Island on Aug. 16. Just be at the Sportsmen's Lodge at 6 a.m. — early, but that's to avoid the crowd and to insure a space in their limited parking area.

* * *

Our South Shore offers a delightful mix of things to do and see. It's a place the old world can be explored if you love "Americana" and there are monuments and lighthouses to climb, artists and craftsmen displaying their creations and hideaway beaches, rivers and ponds to explore. Constantly screening, diving, turning and gliding through the air are the gulls. Their numbers are multiplying to the point where some say they are getting to be pests, but they are a friend to the fishermen, circling over the waters where the schools of fish are and ship's captains hail them for their constant cries serving as a warning during a fog. Seen recently out at Third Cliff in Scituate were other shore birds: two brants, two black-bellied plovers, six least sandpipers, two semi-palmated sandpipers and 150 least terns.

August is a great month to divide iris, transplant evergreens, divide perennials, move ferns and wild flowers.

A must for all visitors is a ride on the Edaville train through the cranberry bogs of South Carver; in fact, Massachusetts being the largest producer of what the Indians called crane-berries, bogs where they are grown, are interesting to see. The native Indians were the first to notice thousands of cranes every fall busily pecking at little red berries. When the Pilgrims arrived, the Indians introduced them to the berry and soon the wives began gathering them for food. It wasn't until 1846 that Henry Hall of Dennis built the first bog in Harwich.

The Old Farmer's Almanac says hayfever victims may expect to start their annual sneeze on the 12th. Most instinctively blame goldenrod for their misery. But a Bucknell University professor says that goldenrod has gotten a bum rap because it is so plentiful, showy and guilty only of an association with hay-fever-causing plants such as ragweed, cocklebur and the wind-blown pollen of these plants. He writes that there are more than 125 species of goldenrod, a plant may live well over 100 years and Kentucky and Nebraska have chosen this beautiful, showy plant as their official flower.

To our early settlers and farmers seeds were as important as the crops. They couldn't order more from spring catalogues, or buy them at a nearby nursery, so seeds were stowed carefully away. When a pioneer went west, he took three things — his gun, his axe and his seeds, saved for the spring planting.

Despite August's all too frequent rains, container plants need additional watering when it's hot and sunny. Their canopy of leaves prevents the rain from penetrating the soil in hanging plants and tubs. When plants such as delicate fuschias and petunias wilt, insects seem to come in for the kill. A pot of white petunias which has flourished by our pool is being chewed by minute black insects and I've been told to spray the petals with soap and water to rid the plant of what seems to be leading to total destruction — will let you know later if they survive.

Thalassa Cruso suggests putting out a flat pan when watering your lawn and when the water reaches an inch, the roots have been penetrated and that's enough water. Nancy Wight has found the best and easiest weapon against those slugs that literally devour your plants is ordinary beer. She writes: "Simply pour it into saucers or other shallow containers and set out each night in your garden. The slug will drown in it . . . ugh." Organic gardeners look upon birds as their allies, for they can devour millions of insects, so cultivate their friendship by providing a bird bath and some feeders.

Make a habit, when out in your garden admiring your annuals, of picking off faded flowers, for if they set seed, that's the end of blooming. Stop and pull off faded petunias, clip back zinnias and cosmos and snap off faded geraniums. And don't forget the liquid fertilizer every two to three weeks, plants have only about two months more to grow, so keep them thriving.

ANGLER'S CORNER

by Bill Smith

Surfcasting can be demanding but rewarding

Surf fishing for bluefish need not be a frustrating experience for novice anglers once a basic understanding of techniques in mastered. No matter how successful he is, the surfcaster always seems to enjoy himself.

Don't get the wrong impression. Surf casting is a demanding sport requiring energy. Yet, it can be a most rewarding experience.

The anglers weapons consist of his rod, reel and selected terminal tackle. Equipment must be carefully selected and properly balanced in order to get the best performance. A novice should consult a reputable tackle dealer to help in his selection.

To the inexperienced, surf tackle appears to be large and cumbersome. However, surf rods of 10 to 12 feet are necessary to fish local beaches. Generally, surf tackle falls into two categories. The most popular is the spinning outfit in which the spool is fixed and will not rotate during the cast.

The second type, conventional tackle, resembles the trolling reel used by boatsmen which incorporates a free spooling reel.

An issue debated by many surfcasters is the advantage of conventional tackle over spinning tackle. Each has its merits and liabilities.

For the surfcaster, the most important factor is to use the type with which he is most comfortable.

I prefer an 11½ foot spinning rod with a fast action tip and plenty of backbone. This rod is capable of casting your baits and lures to cruising fish. The rod can also be put into a sandspike and line will be held above the waves. A second lighter and shorter rod should also be readied for smaller school fish.

The surfcaster needs strong reels which can hold plenty of line. On my spinning reels, I use 17 pound monofilament. This line allows me to make long casts, yet, with a correctly adjusted drag, it can hold the biggest fish you will encounter. On my shorter plugging rod, I usually spool the reel with 12 pound test line.

Surf anglers can utilize either natural baits or artificial lures. Among the most popular natural baits used in this area are mackerel, herring, pogies, squid, sea worms, eels and sand eels. First, try to determine what bluefish are feeding on. Then match this with the appropriate bait. At times, only live bait such as eels and pogies seems to take fish. Be alert and study the fish!

Among the most popular artificial plugs used by surf fisherman are popping plugs when bluefish are feeding on the surface and driving baits. Reel these lures at a rapid speed and bring the rod up and down. This puts the jumping (popping) action into the lure.

Swimming plugs are retrieved much slower and work best on night tides. Metal lures give off a flash imitating the fluttering action of small bait fish. Vary the retrieval speed when using this type of lure.

In general, I prefer to fish the flood (incoming) tides from the outer beaches while I fish the ebb (outgoing) tides at the mouth of bays and rivers. Bluefish move into shallow waters during evening tides in search of bait.

PRAYER THROUGH APPLICATION OF HOLY SPIRIT

Holy Spirit, you who solve all problems, light all roads so that I may attain my goal, you who give me the Divine gift to forgive and forget all evil against me and that in all instances of my life you are with me. I want to thank you for all things as you confirm once again that I never want to be separated from you, even and in spite of all material illusion, I wish to be with you in eternal glory. Thank you for your mercy toward me and mine.
